SPECULATIVE INVESTMENTS.

ARGENTINE HARD DOLLARS.—My latest issued advice for speculative investment was Argentine Hard Dollars. These I recommended when they stood at 60. A purchaser would have since received a quarter's dividend of £9 8s. 9d. on 5,000 dollars, the equivalent of £1,000 stock. They have since been 73¼, so that, allowing for the accrued increase in value, a purchaser would have received interest at the rate of over 25 per cent. per annum on the amount invested, and had they been purchased with a cover of 2 per cent., the profit secured would have been at the rate of 862 per cent. on amount invested. I again repeat I have been invariably right in my speculative investments. I only recommend good dividend paying stocks, and I think this system of making money well worth your attention. See below.

IMPORTANT TELEGRAPHIC ARRANGEMENTS.

I WISH to call close attention to a new departure in my business, which is of the utmost importance to country dealers. I have made arrangements with the Post Office for a direct wire into my own offices, thus saving some ten to twenty minutes on messages. I need hardly point out the advantages to customers dealing at a distance, who are thus put in actual contact with my offices from every part of the United Kingdom. Thus a message sent from

MY CITY OFFICES to MANCHESTER is DELIVERED in FIVE MINUTES.

JOHN SHAW'S SYSTEM of BUSINESS.—He offers more liberal terms for dealing than any dealer in London or elsewhere. Get advice where you choose, but deal where you get the best terms, and possible losses will result in positive profits. For the use and information of his clients, JOHN SHAW has prepared the following: Highest and lowest prices for the past five years of all the leading Stocks and Shares, together with the dividends paid during the same period. Railway weekly Traffic Returns Book for the current half-year, with corresponding figures for 1885 and 1886. Telegraphic Code for transmission of telegrams by cypher. ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This company has been formed to acquire, develop, and work a valuable group of silver mines, close to the Sierra de Guadarrama, situated in the northern part of the Province of Madrid, distant about seven miles from the town of Buitrago.

A railway, already authorised by the Cortes, is to be built between Madrid and Buitrago, which will greatly enhance the value of the property. As shown by Mr. Simpson's report, there is a good road from the mines for transporting the ore to Buitrago.

The mines are held by lease from the Spanish Government in perpetuity (amounting to freehold), subject to a yearly payment of 10 pesetas per hectare, or about 3s. per three acres; thus there is hardly any rental to be paid.

Of the 11 actis, five have been opened up, viz.: La Perla, Virgen del Carmen, Concepcion, Sta. Teresa, and Potosi. The most important workings have been made in La Perla, which is situate in the middle of the actis, and in which several shafts have been sunk, the main shaft to a depth of 279ft., together with about 2,170ft. of levels, at depths of 98ft., 134ft., 196ft., and 262ft., all cut in the continuous lode, which varies from 1in. to 20in. in thickness.

Besides these, exploration works have been made in various parts of the mines, at 98ft., 118ft., and 165ft. at mineralised points, in order to ascertain the depth of mineralisation and the continuity of the lodes, and the results exceeded the most sanguine expectation, the assays made at the mine giving up to 1,685oz., or 5 per cent. of pure silver per ton.

The mines and property were recently inspected by Mr. G. P. Simpson, M.E. (whose reports accompany the prospectus, together with the assay by Mr. R. H. Harland, F.I.C., F.C.S., of the samples of ore brought back by Mr. G. P. Simpson). These reports have been placed before the directors, and, together with Mr. Simpson's personal confirmation of the statements contained in them, have decided the directors to undertake this responsibility. Three samples of the poorest class of ore, which contained only 38, 120, and 214 grammes of silver per ton, were sent to the Humboldt Works, at Kalk, in Germany, to ascertain if the same could be concentrated to a profit. The result was most successful, as it gave a concentrated "Schlich" at the rate of 1,280 grammes of silver per ton for No. 1 sample, 560 for No. 2, and 3,740 for No. 3; the loss in silver being exceedingly small, at the rate of 15, 35, and 60 grammes per ton respectively.

The average assay obtained from 22 samples of ore bought from the mines of Pradena by Mr. Simpson is 60oz., as will be seen from the assay by Mr. R. H. Harland.

It must be borne in mind that the above assay is an average of ore taken throughout the mine, but Sample No. 20 assayed 156oz. 1dwt. 17gr., No. 21 460oz. 5gr., and Sample No. 22 150oz. 6dwt. 2gr.

It is intended without delay to erect additional machinery, capable of treating up to 50 tons per week. On this basis the following is a moderate estimate of profits for the first 12 months after the machinery is in operation:

|---|---|---|---|
| 50 tons ore per week, 60 ozs. silver per ton = 3,000 ozs. at 3s. 6d. = | £580 | 15 | 0 |
| Less cost raising and dressing, and treatment, 50 tons, at £4 | 200 | 0 | 0 |
| Weekly profit | £380 | 15 | 0 |

If from the above amount £380 15s. per week a sum of £30 per week were deducted to cover cost of carriage, agency, and administration expenses in London it would leave a net profit of about £318 15s., or over 30 per cent. on the entire capital of the company.

The price for the entire property, together with the machinery, buildings, stocks of oil, timber, powder, &c., and mining tools, has been fixed by the vendor at £35,000. He stipulates for the right to receive £20,000 at least of the purchase money in shares of the company, and the balance of £15,000 is payable in cash or shares.

This will leave a working capital which, in the opinion of Mr. Simpson, will be ample for the proposed increase of plant and machinery. It will thus be seen that the shareholders will have what the directors believe to be an unusually valuable property compared with most similar profitable undertakings.

The only agreement entered into is a contract for the purchase and transfer of the property, made between Abel Rainbeaux, of the one part, and Arthur Coombs, of the other part, as trustee on behalf of the company, dated 6th October, 1888.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares can be obtained at the offices of the company, or of the bankers and solicitors of the company.

If a less number of shares are allotted than are applied for the balance of application money will be devoted to the payment to become due on allotment.

Where no allotment is made the amount paid on application will be returned in full.

The Share List will be Closed on or before To-morrow (Wednesday), 10th October.

THE KAISER GOLD MINES (Limited).—Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1886.—Capital £200,000, in 200,000 shares of £1 each, of which the vendor takes 66,666 in part payment for the property, and the balance of 133,334 are now offered for subscription. Payable, 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment; and the balance as required, by calls at intervals of not less than one month, and in amounts not exceeding 5s.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This company is formed to lease and operate, as a going and dividend-paying concern, a group of 12 gold mines, situated in the territory of Arizona, U.S.A., together with the 30-stamp mill thereon, and to purchase all appurtenances connected therewith.

The mines have been inspected and reported upon by Mr. Cyrus Gribble, M.E., and by Prof. W. P. Blake, M.E. In order, however, to provide against the possibility of error, the directors have, with the entire concurrence of the vendor, arranged to take over and operate the mines for six months upon the following exceptional terms:

(a) If within the period of six months the mines shall not, in the sole opinion of the directors, prove as valuable as represented by the vendor, they are empowered to call upon the vendor to reimburse the company all expenses of every kind and nature (so that the subscriptions may be returned in full to the shareholders), and should he fail to comply therewith within thirty days of a notice requiring him so to do, then the directors are empowered to sell the mines, mining claims, plant, machinery, tools, stores, &c., by auction.

(b) The balance realised by such sale (if any), after paying in full all and every expense incurred in and about the company, to be paid over to the vendor.

(c) No part of the purchase consideration, either in cash or shares, to be paid to the vendor until the directors have finally determined to take over the property for the company.

(d) The mines are to be operated by the company as from the 1st September instant, from which date all profits realised to belong exclusively to the company upon the directors finally electing to take over the property.

Description of Mines.

The property comprises 12 claims, 11 of them 1,500 by 600ft., and one of 1,050 by 600ft. Several veins traverse the lands. Four only have been worked to any extent. From this small portion of the property upwards of 600,000 tons of ore have been taken, yielding over $5,000,000. The mines are all owned by Hon. Horace A. W. Tabor, who guarantees the validity of the titles.

The mill and machinery, which are in working order and constantly running, comprise 30 stamps, driven by an engine of 125-horse power, with all requisite winding engines, and an engineers' shop, assay office, buildings, tools, and plant. The original cost is stated to have exceeded £30,000.

The bullion averages 780 fine gold, worth $16·16 or about £3 3s. per ounce.

Until recently the free gold only has been saved, and the sulphurets have been allowed to pass away with the tailings. It is stated that there are upon the property tailings amounting to at least 300,000 tons, and that the average yield would exceed $3 per ton.

Estimate of Future Profits and Works Proposed.

The mines are in daily operation, and for the year ending May 1, 1888, as proved by certified returns, yielded about $180,000, or over £36,000 net, a result obtained with only four concentrators at work. Eight more concentrators will be erected and at work before the mine is taken over, which on the basis of Mr. Gribble's estimate should raise the net profit to over £50,000 per annum, or more than 25 per cent. upon the capital of the company, and to this will be added the profit from the working over of the tailings.

It is proposed to eventually lay a second line of water pipes, and to use the supply from the present pipes in treating the tailings above referred to. These tailings are simply concentrated, shipped, and sold.

Reports and Authorities.

In his report for 1885, the director of the United States Mint says of the Vulture: "It is the largest producer of gold in Arizona."

A special report has been made for the company by Prof. W. P. Blake, M.A., F.G.S., Member of the American Ins. of Mining Engineers. Prof. Blake was formerly Government Geologist of Japan, and also Government Geologist of the United States, and is probably the greatest living authority upon United States gold mines. Extracts from this report and from the report of Mr. C. Gribble accompany the full prospectus.

Mr. Gribble states that the developments have reached a vertical depth of about 500ft., and there now stand in sight in these lower levels 150,000 tons of rich ore with an assay value of from $15 to $20 per ton; besides 200,000 tons still remaining in sight in the upper levels of the same grade as the ore already extracted.

A contract has been entered into dated 7th September, 1888, between Hon. H. A. W. Tabor (the registered owner of the property) of the one part, and the company of the other part, for a lease of all the real property for a period of 80 years at a nominal yearly rent of £10 for each of the 12 claims, and for the sale of the equipments, all for the sum of £180,000, payable as to £15,000 in cash, and as to 66,666 in shares, and the balance, viz., £98,334, in cash or shares at the option of the directors. In this contract are embodied the provisions upon which is based the second paragraph of this prospectus.

Full prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained of the bankers, brokers, or at the offices of the company, where also copies of the reports can be inspected.

In case where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and when a less amount is allotted than applied for, the balance of the application-money will be applied to the amount due upon allotment.

15 PER CENT. DIVIDENDS and a HALFPENNY STAMPED POST CARD for a FARTHING.

The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., writes, under date Sept. 21, 1888: "I shall watch your experiment with interest, and I shall be glad if it operate as a corrective of the extravagant price now charged to the Government for Post Cards, since in that case it must extend the consumption, and thus enlarge the Revenue. I should be glad to have a few specimens."

THE FARTHING LETTER-CARD COMPANY (Limited).—Share capital £20,000, in 80,000 shares of 5s. each. Payable, 1s. on application, 1s. on allotment, and the balance in calls of 1s. each, at intervals of one month; or the whole may be paid up on allotment, dividends being paid on the amount paid up.

THE FARTHING LETTER-CARD COMPANY (Limited). ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The idea of selling a half-penny stamped post-card for a farthing has now been worked steadily for some months past, until the business has assumed dimensions which are thought to justify the formation of a public company to further develop the invention.

Agents for the sale of the cards have been appointed in leading centres of commerce. The sale of post-cards in the United Kingdom reached last year a total of 188,000,000.

By means of the advertisements placed round the card, for which Royal Letters Patent have been granted, as per the specimen sent with the prospectus, it is possible to sell the stout card, stamped with a half-penny stamp ready for use, for one farthing, and yet make a handsome profit.

The cards are printed in series of 100,000, and an advertiser who has an extensive use for cards can, by buying 15,000, have his advertisements on 100,000 for nothing, as the saving in the price of the cards more than pays for the cost of the advertisement.

The business will be taken over as from the 1st October, and an agreement has been entered into with Messrs. Shelley and Co., Advertising Contractors, of 5, Leadenhall-street, E.C., for letting all the advertising spaces on the cards, they agreeing to take a minimum number of 100,000 cards a week for three years from the 15th October, 1888, subject to a penalty. The amount receivable under this contract and from the sale of the cards will be sufficient to pay 15 per cent. dividends on the whole of the capital from the first. A copy of this agreement can be seen at the company's offices.

The consideration to be paid for the patent, goodwill, and other assets connected with the business is 100 founders' shares, carrying half the profits after 20 per cent. has been paid on the ordinary shares, and the sum of £15,000, payable as to £3,000 in cash, and the balance in cash or shares at the option of the directors.

The directors have allowed for £4,975 for working capital.

The shareholders will be asked to assemble for their statutory meeting as early as possible after allotment, for the purpose of appointing an auditor, one of whose duties it will be to check and certify the number of post cards stamped and issued by the Post Office authorities on behalf of the company.

The contracts which have been entered into can be seen at the offices of the solicitors to the company, and are fully set out in the prospectus, copies of which, together with forms of application for shares, can be obtained of the bankers, or from the secretary.

MONEY MARKET.

MONDAY EVENING.

Although money is in good demand, all indications of pressure have disappeared, and short loans were freely offered at 3½, 4 per cent., in spite of further large repayments to the Bank of England. It is also understood that the Bank again borrowed on stock at 4½ per cent. up to the next Consols settlement, fixed for Nov. 2. The effect of the distribution of the dividends on the Funds and other securities is now being more distinctly felt. It is believed that the outside institutions will obtain about 5 per cent. on Wednesday for their Stock Exchange advances. About £60,000 in gold from France was sent into the Bank, and some may soon be received from Holland. It would appear, moreover, that a fresh issue in St. Petersburg of £1,800,000 in "temporary credit notes" is covered by bullion held by the Imperial Bank of Russia. It is therefore assumed that no additional efflux for that quarter will be reported at present. At Paris the open market rate of discount is only 3¾, 4 per cent., or ¼ to ⅛ below official terms, and the private charge in Berlin is 3¾ per cent. The Bank of Germany made no alteration to-day in its minimum, which consequently remains at 4 per cent. The next weekly return of that establishment is expected to show a large decrease in the note circulation and an increase in the "cash in hand," as usual at the turn of the quarter.

On the Stock Exchange prices opened weak, under the influence of the Board of Trade returns. Some sales were made, too, on the remarks of the Russian press regarding the recent speeches of the German and Austrian Emperors, though a rally ensued when it transpired that no alteration had been made in the value of money in Berlin. But the last quotations were not the best, the markets being prejudiced late in the day by a fall on the Bourses and rumours of financial difficulties in Paris. The nearness of the settlement here is besides an important factor, but it is probable that the demand for money will not be so severe as anticipated, preparations having been already made in view of a certain degree of pressure, while many weak speculative accounts for a rise have disappeared. Although the amount to-day was not so large as expected, the Bank has now bought nearly £460,000 in gold since last Wednesday, and a further considerable total will probably come to hand in a day or two. Consols and British Two and a Half per Cents. rose 1-16 to ⅛ per cent. A few of the home lines left off higher; North British Deferred was in demand on traffic prospects, and advanced 1⅜ per cent. Great Western improved ⅛, and some of the other stocks ⅛ to ⅜, but Hull and Barnsley fell ½, and the Southern descriptions were dull. The Brighton traffic return, however, showed an increase of £3,253, and the South-Eastern an increase of £1,527. American railroads opened weak, and so closed after a temporary rally. The decline in most cases ranged from ⅛ to ⅜, Lake Shore, Denver Preferred, and Northern Pacific being chiefly affected. Grand Trunks and Mexican (Vera Cruz) improved a little, due to the prospect of a small supply of stock at the liquidation.

In the foreign department Spanish were largely sold, and fell about ⅜ per cent., owing to large sales on Madrid account. Egyptian Unified were likewise freely offered, and receded nearly ⅜, attributed to the heavy fall of the Nile. Cedulas, Hungarian, Mexican, Peruvian, Portuguese, Russian, and Turkish Tributes exhibited depression, while Virginia Funded were in request, and advanced 1½. Ecuador, Greek, and Uruguayan were better. Cable shares were dull, especially Anglo-American. The feature in banks was a recovery of 1 in New Zealand. Brewery stocks were flat, and tramways firm. Indian gold mines were inquired for, and Mysores rose about ⅛. A moderate recovery took place in copper undertakings, while diamond securities gave way. The relapse in De Beers and Kimberley Central, however, was only ⅛ each.

Gold from the Continent worth £60,000 was purchased by the Bank. The Elbe, from New York, has brought £38,500 in specie.

The bar silver by the Chilian packet was sold at 42d per ounce, showing no variation. Bombay transfers at 1s 4 11-32d and Calcutta at 1s 4⅜d were 1-32d lower. Bills in Hong Kong declined ⅛d, to 3s 1⅞d, and in Shanghai ⅛d, to 4s 3⅝d. Four and a Half per Cent. Rupee Paper fell ⅛, to 70⅞, 71, but the Four per Cents. were steady, at 67⅞, ⅝.

A heavy tone prevailed on the Continental Bourses, and at Berlin a fall took place in Austrian Credit, Deutsche Bank, Lombardo, Egyptian Unified, Mexican, Prussian Three and a Half per Cents., Russian, Turkish, Italian, and Hungarian. The rouble was 2 lower. Prussian Four per Cents., however, improved. In Paris, Suez Canal, Panama, Ottoman Bank, Spanish, and Portuguese receded, and Rio Tinto advanced. At 82f 25c, the Three per Cent. Rentes were down 12½c, and the Four and a Half per Cents. remained at 105f 52½c. The exchange on London (cheques) was without movement, at 25f 41½c.

Under the title of the Pradena Silver Mines (Limited) a new company is formed, with a capital of £50,000, in £1 shares, to acquire and work a group of silver mines in Spain. The price to be paid for the property is £35,000, including at least £20,000 in shares.

With regard to the export of gold from Europe to South America the Buenos Ayres Standard remarks:

> The fact is that the Plate is growing very big, and its requirements are even larger than people in this or the foreign market believe. All this gold comes out for account of loans to start new banks under the provisions of the Pacheco Free-Banking Act, and we may say that the precious metal comes in the very nick of time, at a moment when gold is scarce in the market and the premium susceptible of a very heavy rise. But for these remittances gold would be near 200 to-day; the evil day has been put off, and the 40 or 50 million gold dollars from Europe will probably suffice to tide over the situation for another six months, perhaps a year; but at the present rate affairs can only be kept up by increasing our indebtedness yearly in an ever-growing ratio. As long as all this gold is sunk in railways and public works—nay, in soundly-managed banks—all is well, as the country is growing rapidly under the immense impulse of a steady current of immigration from Europe; but if this borrowed money is squandered or scattered indiscriminately by the State banks to Tom, Dick, and Harry of this and that political faction, the outlook is not reassuring. It is to be hoped, for the sake of the finances of the nation, as well as of the provinces, that the National Government will exercise the strictest supervision of the transactions of all these new banks started in Cordoba, Entre Rios, Salta, Santiago, &c.

According to our contemporary's estimate, eight to ten millions sterling in bullion will be required in all from this side, of which about six millions have already been provided. But it is hoped that, in the present condition of the English money market, further operations will be deferred for the present. This question will doubtless be soon decided, for a steamer is fixed to leave Southampton for Buenos Ayres on Thursday next.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS—MONDAY.

LONDON CORN EXCHANGE.—The grain trade at Mark-lane has remained very firm owing to the wintry weather. The sales of home-grown wheat in the leading markets of England and Wales during the first six weeks of the season were 101,109 quarters, against 68,[illegible] quarters last season, at an average of 34s 11d, against 32s 11d per quarter; barley, 27,[illegible], against 217,[illegible] quarters, average 30s 7d, against 27s 9d; and oats, 16,[illegible], against 15,[illegible] quarters, the average being 18s, against 14s 10d per quarter. Fresh supplies of English grain were short, of foreign moderate. Wheat was firm. English wheat sold steadily at full prices, or 2s to 3s per quarter dearer on the week. Foreign wheat was firm, and 2s to 3s better. Flour was steady, at a rise of 1s 6d per sack. Barley was a strong market. Malting ruled against the buyer, and grinding was 3d and 6d dearer. Oats were 6d to 1s better than on Monday last, with a moderate inquiry. Maize was steady, at an advance of 3d to 6d per quarter. Beans and peas were in good demand, with an upward tendency in prices.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE.—The cattle trade has been dull. The number of beasts offering was in excess of the demand, which was at no time animated. The total was 3,780, of which 150 were from abroad, including 70 from Canada. Scotland contributed 30, Ireland 500, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex 200, Midland, Home, and Western Counties 2,[illegible]. The market was flat; a few Scots made 5s per 8lb, but this was exceptional, the general top price being 4s 10d per 8lb. Sheep were in good supply—6,[illegible], of which 1,[illegible] were foreign. About 2,000 came from Ireland. There was a slow market. Prime eight to nine stone Downs made 6s 2d, and ten stone half-breds, 6s per 8lb. There were 130 calves on offer; the trade was very dull, but choice breeds, from their scarcity, made 5s 2d per 8lb. Pigs were quiet, but steady, at full prices. 50 English milch cows, £15 to £22 per head. Statement and comparison of the supplies and prices of stock exhibited and sold in the Metropolitan Cattle Market on Monday, Oct. 10, 1887, and on this day (Monday), Oct. 8, 1888. SEEDS.—Messrs. John Shaw and Sons report a firm market for all kinds of cloverseeds. The prospects of the new crops being so bad, the tendency of values continues strongly upwards, and considerable quantities of seeds have recently changed hands at full prices. Perennial and Italian ryegrasses keep steady. For winter tares there is a good demand at hardening rates. Seed rye is extremely cheap. The sale for trifolium is nearly over. Canaryseed is firmer. Hempseed unchanged. Some fine new French millet is now selling at moderate rates. Blue peas and haricot beans find buyers at last week's quotations. New Essex mustard has now come to market.

WOOL.—The English wool market has not developed any new feature. Business is quiet, produce being still held above the views of buyers; hence, not much is done, whilst prices are unaltered. The sale passed off with brisk competition at firm prices. Messrs. ## SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE CESAREWITCH.

If the Newmarket Second October goes on as it has commenced there will be little room for complaint at the end of the week. The programme of the first day was both varied and interesting, and although the afternoon scarcely reflected the morning brightness the weather proved fairly favourable. The company included many influential supporters of the turf, who were not present at the previous meeting, and there is no doubt that the usual excitement will prevail to-morrow, when the Cesarewitch comes on for decision. One of the earliest items of news that greeted the morning arrivals was to the effect that Kenilworth had galloped strong and well without betraying any symptoms of a cough. At the same time he was not half so strong a tip as Trayles, and scarcely were the bookmakers assembled on the Heath than the Bedford Cottage candidate became favourite again. The racing opened with the Trial Plate, and the quondam stable-companions, Fullerton and Grafton, left off in slightly better demand than Love-in-Idleness, who met Lord Dudley's horse at a stone the best of the weights, the one being penalised 7lb, and the others allowed as much. To the regret, doubtless, of his Cambridgeshire supporters Fullerton did not show the least trace of his Spring and Summer form, and recent hard work had told a tale in the case of Grafton. From the Bushes, in fact, Love-in-Idleness left them literally standing still, and great was the surprise when Braw Lass, whose ability to stay a mile had apparently been unexpected, drew on terms and easily scored first blood. This was a good start for the bookmakers, and they added to their gains when Peck o' Pepper brought off a 100 to 6 chance in the Visitors' Plate from Delaware and April Fool. Mr. Combe's filly had been performing unsuccessfully of late in selling races, and was beaten in a canter by Proserpine II. at Doncaster immediately after the St. Leger. The two favourites for the Visitors' Plate, Upset and Justitia, were harmless a long way from home, and an apprentice was of little assistance to Helmsley from the foot of the hill. The victory of Paloma last week at Epsom had placed her very high up in the handicap for the Second October Nursery, and yet she started favourite from Yard Arm, although there was not a very wide gap between the pair. Intervening berths were occupied by Tremolo, Unco Guid, Devonian, and Roslin. The five furlongs exactly suited the fine speed of Paloma, and readily answering to Barrett's call, she secured the award by a length. The two most fancied articles for the First Welter Handicap, Isosceles and Cohort, could not obtain a situation between them, and Red Palmer pulled through from Monkshood and Whistle Jacket. He was bound to run well on his Leicester form, and, later on, Lord Penrhyn supplied a second winner in the handsome Noble Chieftain. Why the bookmakers fielded against him I am unable to understand, as, apart from Galore having shown himself of late very much off colour, he was trying to give the "Chieftain" 7lb. The result was placed beyond doubt immediately Noble Chieftain turned on full steam, and the illness of Weldon explains the fact of Fred Barrett being in the saddle. To hark back a little, Donovan did not enter the lists against his Goodwood conqueror, El Dorado, for the Clearwell Stakes, and the market suggested a weak opposition to Mr. Douglas Baird's penalised son of Sterling. Although El Dorado made the whole of the running and won by two lengths, he did not carry himself generously, and perhaps the task of forcing the work was distasteful to him. The Plate of 100 Guineas for two-year-olds produced the biggest field of the afternoon, and Bangor left off third favourite from Poem and Heptarchy. He ran a soft race, however, from the Bushes, and when Ketta got home by a head from Poem, Mr. Fenwick had cause to congratulate himself upon having purchased her out of Mr. Rothschild's service a fortnight since for 470 guineas. Still the situation soon altered, as, with an objection lodged against Ketta upon the grounds of boring, the Stewards decided in favour of Poem. There was a lot of betting before the announcement, and those who laid 20 to 1 on Ketta must now recognise that objections are dangerous to meddle with. The entertainment closed with the October Post Produce Stakes, and as Ormuz outshone his two opponents, Pantomime and Virgin Queen, in the Birdcage, so did he quickly put them to the shade in the race.

To-morrow brings us face to face with the Cesarewitch, and from latest advices I expect the following to compose a correct list of

| | |
|---|---|
| Ténébreuse, 4 yrs, 8st 12lb, by Merle or Saxifrage—New Star | T. Cannon. |
| Phil, 4 yrs, 8st 11lb, by Philammon—Phœbe | Rickaby. |
| Acmé, 3 yrs, 8st 11lb, by Dutch Skater—Myra | Webb. |
| Rêve d'Or, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb, by Hampton—Queen of the Roses | E. Martin. |
| Oliver Twist, 5 yrs, 8st 8lb, by Isonomy—Celerite | Watts. |
| Button Park, 5 yrs, 8st 8lb, by Avontes—Makesure | G. Barrett. |
| Zanzibar, 3 yrs, 8st 8lb, by Sterling—Lady Paramount | —— |
| Savile, 4 yrs, 8st 3lb, by Hampton—Lilian | T. Cannon, jun. |
| Cotillon, 3 yrs, 8st 1lb, by Hagioscope—Mabille | F. Barrett. |
| Trayles, 3 yrs, 7st 12lb, by Restless—Miss Mabel | Robinson. |
| Ruddigore, 4 yrs, 7st 10lb, by Thurio—Blood Red | S. Loates. |
| Tonans, aged, 7st 9lb, by Thunder—Splash | Warne. |
| Matin Bell, 4 yrs, 7st 6lb, by Thurio—Evening Chimes | Chandley. |
| Admiral Benbow, 3 yrs, 7st 4lb, by Victor II.—Sultana | T. Loates. |
| Governor Waller, 4 yrs, 7st 3lb, by Reverberation—Clarice | J. Calder. |
| White Flag, 3 yrs, 7st 2lb, by Discord—Alba | J. Woodburn. |
| Polydor, 3 yrs, 7st 1lb, by Bend Or—Maryland | G. Chaloner. |
| Sorrento, 4 yrs, 7st 1lb, by Springfield—Napoli | J. Wall. |
| Kenilworth, 3 yrs, 7st 1lb, by Chippendale—Lady Yardley | Luke. |
| Rhythm, 4 yrs, 7st, by Kingcraft—Braw Dance | A. White. |
| Millstream, 5 yrs, 6st 12lb, by Wisdom—Mill Race | Dibben. |
| Frank, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb, by Trent—Frantic | G. Bates. |
| East Indian, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb, by Camballo—Lais | —— |

The latest features of the market can be summed up in the return of Trayles to strong favouritism, the recovery of Kenilworth, the steadiness of the Manton pair—Button Park and Rêve d'Or, the decline of Polydor, and the good demand for Cotillon and White Flag of the second division. From this time until the fall of the flag there should be plenty of business, and now that he shows a clean bill I am prepared to see Trayles nearly, if not quite, follow in the footsteps of Humewood from the same stable last year. At any rate, the cry of the money being wrong has ceased to exist, and should he fail in the Cesarewitch he might still be heard of for the Cambridgeshire. Rêve d'Or is, perhaps, more fancied by the Manton people than Button Park, but we have been told again and again that the latter is utterly unreliable at home, and I cannot forget what he did at Doncaster. Nobody who sees Acme to-morrow will fail to admire him, and if he fails to finish in the first flight, want of stamina will be the one and only cause. Frank goes to the post to serve White Flag, and should the latter reward the confidence of all concerned in him, his success will not have come out of turn. It was a relief to the partisans of Kenilworth to find that matters were not so bad with him as they had been painted, and a big shout will go up from the North-country division should he be well placed in descending the Bushes Hill. At the same time I do not see any cause to search further than Button Park, Acme, and Trayles, and, as I claimed the privilege of altering my selection if the last-named came all right at the eleventh hour, my final words shall be for

with the hope that ACME will not disgrace himself. My other selections are: DELAWARE or PATCHOULI for the Heath Stakes, WRINKLE or EMERALD for the Maiden Plate, PETERSBURG or ALEC for the Stand Nursery, LACEMAN or KETTA for the Selling Plate, SAWDUST or BROOKLYN for the Flying Welter, GULBEYAZ or FREEMASON for the Severals Plate, and OSSORY for the Royal Stakes.

Yard Arm jumped off in front, and made play on the left from Paloma, Unco Guid, and Tremolo, with Davenport lying handy in the centre, and Devonian and Roslin on the extreme right clear of George. After running half the journey Devonian took up the running, and came on from Roslin, Unco Guid, and Paloma, with Yard Arm next, into the Abingdon Mile Bottom, when Yard Arm was beaten, and Paloma taking the lead opposite the stand, won by a length; a head separated second and third. Devonian was fourth, Roslin fifth, Yard Arm sixth, George seventh, and Koffee last.

THE LONDON TRAGEDIES.

The Central News says the Metropolitan Police last night made an arrest through the instrumentality of the manager of a London clothes cleaning establishment near Holborn. The same news agency adds the following: "Last Wednesday afternoon a man called at the shop between twelve and two o'clock in the afternoon with two garments—an overcoat and a pair of trousers—to be cleaned. They were both blood-stained; the coat was especially smeared near one of the pockets, and there were large spots of blood on various parts of the trousers. The manager was away at the time, and his wife took charge of the clothes; the owner of the garments said he would call for them on Friday or Saturday. The woman called her husband's attention to the blood stains, and he communicated with the Metropolitan Police, who, having examined the garments, took them to Scotland-yard. Since then two detectives were secreted on the premises, awaiting the stranger's return. Friday and Saturday passed by without his calling, but last evening he entered the shop a few minutes before closing time. A detective-sergeant and a companion seized him without much ceremony, and he was taken straight to Leman-street Police-station. Meanwhile the prisoner accounted for the presence of the blood-marks by the assertion that he had cut his hand. It is stated, however, that his explanation was not altogether consistent, as he spoke of having cut himself last Saturday, and then, as if recollecting himself, said he had also cut his hand previously. He further stated that he had had the garments by him, at his lodgings, for two or three weeks, but he refused to give his address. The prisoner is of good physique."

On inquiry at Leman-street Police-station at midnight it was stated that no person suspected of participation in the Whitechapel murders remained under arrest.

The Press Association states: "We are officially informed that Sir Charles Warren, the Chief Commissioner of Police, has made arrangements for the employment of bloodhounds to track the murderer in the event of any further persons being found murdered under circumstances similar to those in the cases which have recently occurred in Whitechapel. An instruction has been issued to the police that they are not to remove the body of the victim, but to send notice immediately to a veterinary surgeon in the south-west district, who holds several trained bloodhounds in readiness to be taken to the spot where the body may be found, and to be at once put on the scent. No details as to the plan which will be followed are given. The plan of operations will, to a great extent, depend upon the circumstances of any particular case in which the aid of the bloodhounds may be called into requisition."

The following opinions are those of Mr. A. E. Knowles, who for many years was employed in America and in Great Britain in detective work. Mr. Knowles was a member of the Pinkerton private inquiry combination of New York, whose services are frequently retained by the Government of the United States, and subsequently he had a successful experience in the detective department of the Glasgow police. Latterly, having virtually retired from business, he has been resident in the metropolis, with which he is thoroughly familiar. Mr. Knowles, as an expert in criminal investigation, is convinced that the Whitechapel murderer is insane, because of the absence of motive and of the character of the mutilations which he perpetrates. That he is a coward is evidenced by the class of victims chosen, and the fact that these women must have been in a state of drink at the time of their death. The manner in which the culprit has eluded notice, and the way in which he guarded against suspicion both before and after the murders, shows that he is possessed of considerable intelligence, probably the cunning of the lunatic. The assassin must have means at his command by which he is enabled to change his abode, personal appearance, and dress at pleasure. Time has been wasted in looking amongst the rags of Whitechapel for him, and the step which should have been taken at the outset was to have sent information to every railway station and port within reasonable distance of London immediately after the first murder was reported. By these means every passenger out of the City on the Sunday would have been scrutinised. The police lost their opportunity at the time of the Hanbury-street murder. Had they adopted the same precautions as prevail now the man would have been captured. The murderer, Mr. Knowles believes, is not now in the East of London, and, the hue-and-cry being so great, he doubts his presence in England. Great precautions are necessary, as during a period of panic the imitative faculty is strong, as already shown by the commission of a similar crime at Gateshead. There are circumstances which justify the inference that the Whitechapel murderer is respectably connected, living alone in chambers, or possibly with a relative—and if the latter it cannot be expected that a mother or sister would hand him over to justice, but would do all she could to get him out of the country. Ten or twelve years ago a case occurred in America in which two children, both girls under fourteen, were found murdered. They were enticed from the streets at different times and their throats were cut. One body was thrown into a garden and the other into a piece of waste ground. The author of the crime could not be discovered. A little girl was sent out as a decoy, and was watched meanwhile by detectives. For days nothing occurred, but at last a man to whom suspicion pointed drew near. The success of the stratagem was marred, however, by the fear of the detectives that he might kill the girl before their eyes, and they dared not hide themselves. The individual suspected made off, but he was "shadowed," and his address and connections were discovered. Owing to the political system prevailing the chief of the police could not be induced to issue a warrant, as, legally, there was absolutely no evidence. In England the man would have certainly been detained for inquiries. Every effort to interview him failed, and his family sent him out of the country, it is alleged, to avoid further inquiry. Mr. Knowles thinks that the English detective system might be reinforced by a small body of well-paid, well-dressed men of good education and proven intelligence, and of not more than 5ft 7in in height, as a person over that stature attracts attention. Mr. Pinkerton, in choosing his staff, invariably gives the preference to short men. Detectives need not of necessity be policemen.

Writing upon the question of the reform of the detective organisation an officer who has had many years' experience in the Metropolis and City of London forces, as well as in the borough police and county constabulary, says: "It would be well for the Home Secretary to have at command the entire control of a select and distinct detective force, members of which could at any moment be dispatched to any part of the kingdom, and be answerable only to the Government for their duty. If possible, they should be the pick of the police, because men trained in police service have a knowledge of criminals and their ways. They should be of good education, for education cannot fail to master subtlety in the long run. The ordinary detective may possess tact, which, in common cases, makes him useful; but in important matters clear judgment, guided by the powers that education alone can give, is essential. In this branch of the service should be enrolled men of proved integrity. It would be worth the cost to the nation to pay such a force in proportion to its standard as a high-class and intelligent body, at liberty to attend anywhere. The Secretary of State should not stand alone in this particular department, for all who have held that office have not been alike. Lord Cross and Sir Wm. Harcourt were eminently able directors on criminal subjects. Men like them are not always at the helm—political changes remove them—and they may be succeeded by persons of less energetic temperament."

FUNERAL OF THE MITRE-SQUARE VICTIM.

The funeral of the victim of the Mitre-square tragedy took place yesterday afternoon. In the vicinity of the City mortuary in Golden-lane quite a multitude of persons assembled to witness the departure of the cortège for the Ilford cemetery. Not only was the thoroughfare itself thronged with people, but the windows and roofs of adjoining buildings were occupied by groups of spectators. The procession left the mortuary shortly after half-past one o'clock. It consisted of a hearse of improved description, a mourning coach, containing relatives and friends of the deceased, and a brougham conveying representatives of the press. The coffin was of polished elm, with oak mouldings, and bore a plate with the inscription, in gold letters, "Catherine Eddowes, died Sept. 30, 1888, aged 43 years." One of the sisters of the deceased laid a beautiful wreath on the coffin as it was placed in the hearse, and at the graveside a wreath of marguerites was added by a sympathetic kinswoman. The mourners were the four sisters of the murdered woman, Harriet Jones, Emma Eddowes, Eliza Gold, and Elizabeth Fisher, her two nieces Emma and Harriet Jones, and John Kelly, the man with whom she had lived. As the funeral procession passed through Golden-lane and Old-street the thousands of persons who followed it nearly into Whitechapel rendered locomotion extremely difficult. Order was, however, admirably maintained by a body of police under Superintendent Foster and Inspector Woollett of the City force, and beyond the boundaries of the City by a further contingent under Superintendent Hunt and Inspector Burnham of the G Division. The route taken after leaving Old-street was by way of Great Eastern-street, Commercial-street, Whitechapel-road, Mile-end-road, through Stratford to the City cemetery at Ilford. A large crowd had collected opposite the parish church of St. Mary's, Whitechapel, to see the procession pass, and at the cemetery it was awaited by several hundreds, most of whom had apparently made their way thither from the East-end. Men and women of all ages, many of the latter carrying infants in their arms, gathered round the grave. The remains were interred in the Church of England portion of the cemetery, the service being conducted by the chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Dunscombe. Mr. G. C. Hawkes, a vestryman of St. Luke's, undertook the responsibility of carrying out the funeral at his own expense, and the City authorities, to whom the burial ground belongs, remitted the usual fees.

THE WHITEHALL INQUEST.

Yesterday Mr. John Troutbeck, coroner for Westminster, opened an inquest on the remains of the woman discovered in a vault of the new police office on the Thames Embankment on Tuesday last. Assembling at the mortuary in Millbank-street, the jury were sworn, and viewed the remains there, afterwards adjourning to the Sessions House, Broad-sanctuary, where the evidence was taken.

Frederick Wildborn was the first witness examined, and he said: I live at 17, Mansell-road, Clapham Junction, and am a carpenter employed by Messrs. Grover and Sons at the New Central Police Office at Westminster. On Tuesday last I was at the buildings, and my work took me to all parts of the place during the day. At six o'clock on the morning of the previous day I had occasion to go to the vaults to find my tools, my labourer having taken them there on the Saturday. I then noticed what I took to be an old coat thrown on one side. It was lying in the corner of a recess. It was very dark there, even in the middle of the day. I could not find my tools—my labourer having, in fact, already removed them. In the evening at 5.30 I went once more to the vaults, and I then noticed the parcel again. There was no smell, not in the least. I drew my mate's attention to the parcel, and struck a wax vesta to look at it.

The Coroner: Was that the first time you had noticed it particularly?—Yes; but we did not know what it was, and came away.

Did you report the circumstance?—Not then. I saw the parcel again the next morning. About one o'clock Mr. Brown, the assistant foreman, came down to where I was at work, and I then informed him of what I had seen. We both went and looked at the parcel, and we thought it seemed curious.

Was it opened in your presence?—No.

Were you in the vault on the Saturday?—I was not there for a week before.

When you were last there did you perceive anything unusual?—No.

Did your labourer say anything to you about it?—No. I heard of the discovery of a body about three-quarters of an hour after Mr. Brown had seen the parcel.

Did the parcel remain in the same position from the Monday until you drew Mr. Brown's attention to it?—Yes; when I lit the match was the first time I had noticed anything particular. There was some débris in the place.

Has this vault been used for putting your tools in for any length of time?—For some weeks until the last three weeks. I always placed my tools there from Saturday to Monday, because I considered them safer there than in the locker. I have not noticed any similar parcel before.

No one carrying such a parcel?—No.

Is there any difficulty in getting to the vault?—Yes, to a stranger.

By the Jury: There is a hoarding all round the buildings. Each time I had to strike a match in order to see the parcel. I got to the vault not by means of a plank, but of a compo floor. I was not at the works at all from the Saturday to the Monday. When I saw the parcel first I thought it was a workman's old coat.

George Budgen deposed: I live in Salisbury-buildings, Walworth, and am a bricklayer's labourer, in the employ of Messrs. Grover. I was in this vault last Tuesday afternoon, just before three o'clock. I went there because my foreman, Mr. Cheney, told me there was a parcel there, and I was to examine it. I looked at it, and found that the top was bare, and the rest wrapped in some old cloth, but could make nothing of it. I thought it was some old bacon at first. I took hold of the strings around it, and dragged it into the light and cut the strings, three or four in number. On opening the old wrapper I saw that the parcel contained part of a human body.

How long before had you been in the vault?—Not for a long time. I had no occasion to go there.

Had you ever seen the parcel before?—No. I took a lamp down; without it I should not have been able to see anything. It was as dark as the darkest night. The police afterwards took charge of the remains.

What was said to you when you were sent to the vault?—The foreman only asked me to go and see what the parcel was.

Thomas Hawkins, detective, A Division, said: About twenty minutes past three on Tuesday afternoon last Mr. Brown came to the King-street police-station, and from what he told the inspector I was despatched to the new police buildings. In one of the vaults I observed some human remains, wrapped in a piece of dress material and tied with string. I went to where the men told me the parcel had been found, and saw two pieces more of dress material. I left a constable in charge of the body while I went to the station, and also reported the discovery to Dr. Bond, who soon arrived at the spot. I directed all the witnesses to come to the station, where their statements were taken down. I fetched Detective-inspector Marshall, who came at five o'clock and took charge of the body.

What did you notice about the vaults?—They were very dark, so dark that it was impossible for a stranger to reach them without artificial light. The body was lying across a trench.

Frederick Moore, being sworn, stated: I live in Great Peter-street, and am a deal porter. About a quarter to one on Sept. 11 I was standing outside the gates of No. 113, Grosvenor-road—a deal wharf where I work—when my attention was called by a few workmen looking over the Embankment to something which was lying in the mud of the river near the sluices from Millbank Distillery. The men said they thought the object was an arm, but I did not think it was. However, a ladder was obtained, and we then found that it was an arm.

Was it wrapped in anything?—Nothing.

Was there any string round it?—Yes, round the upper part. I put the arm on the timber, and gave information to the police.

You had not seen the arm before?—No.

And you do not think it was there the day before?—I could not say.

William James, Constable 127 B: About 12.45 on Sept. 11 I was on duty on Grosvenor Embankment, when my attention was called to the arm by the last witness, and I conveyed it first to the police-station, and subsequently to the mortuary.

Did you find any other remains?—No. I was on special patrol on the Embankment for a week afterwards, but saw nothing else on the mud.

Charles William Brown: I reside at 5, Hampton-terrace, Hornsey, and am assistant foreman to Messrs. Grover, at the new police offices, Whitehall. The works are shut off from the surrounding streets by a hoarding about 7ft high.

How many entrances are there?—Three; two in Cannon-row and one on the Embankment. There are gates at the entrances as high as the hoardings.

How long have these vaults been completed?—Three months.

Who was admitted to the works besides workmen?—No one, unless they had business.

So that any person who chose could walk in?—There was no one to prevent them. On Saturdays, all the gates are locked up, except a small one in Cannon-row.

Is there a watchman there?—No.

Who are left on the premises at night?—No one. The small gate in Cannon-row is secured by a latch, and it is not everybody who can undo it.

Is there any watchman outside?—No.

What were the approaches to the vaults?—A road made of planks laid two abreast. Once down in the vaults it is very dark. The floors have to be laid there and the drains put down. Carpenters were at work there the week before the discovery.

Did you observe anything about the state of the locks on the following Monday morning.—No.

Did they look as if they had been forced?—I did not notice.

Do you think previous knowledge was required to get to the vaults?—Yes, I do. I first saw the parcel about half-past two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. I had been in the vaults on the Monday, but had not noticed any smell. I was there in the dark. On Tuesday the first witness called my attention to the parcel. He struck a light, and I saw in the corner what looked like an old coat with a piece of ham inside. I procured a lamp, and the parcel was afterwards got out and opened.

By the Jury: Tools have been stolen on the works. I do not think it possible that any one could have lowered the parcel from Richmond-mews.

Mr. George Cheney: I live at 23, Berwick-street, Wandsworth Bridge, and am a foreman of bricklayers at the new police buildings. On Tuesday afternoon last Mr. Brown led me to this parcel, and on our striking a light we examined it, but could not make out what it was. We obtained a lamp, and removed the parcel to daylight, when we saw the remains of a woman.

How long before that had you been in the vault?—Not since it was finished three months ago.

Had you seen the parcel before anywhere else?—No.

Ernest Edge, a general labourer, living in Peabody's-buildings, Farringdon-road, deposed: I was in this vault on Saturday week at twenty minutes to five in the evening, going there to get a hammer to nail the door of a locker. I struck a match, but nothing was in the vault then. I went across the trench, where we were measuring on the Friday. On the Saturday I was in the very corner where the parcel was discovered on the Tuesday.

There was no parcel there on the Saturday?—No. I might have been near the vault on the Monday; I certainly was on the Tuesday.

The vault leads to nowhere?—No.

Are workmen constantly in the vault during the day?—Almost every day they go there to look for things. On the Saturday I locked up after everybody had gone, and left everything secure. As to the gate, which opens with a latch, I left that in the usual way. I am sure it was shut. To open the gate it was only necessary to pull the string.

By the jury: The string would not attract the attention except of persons who knew about such buildings.

Mr. Thomas Bond: I am a surgeon, and reside at the Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey. On Oct. 2, shortly before four o'clock, I was called to the new police buildings, where I was shown the decomposed trunk of a body. It was then lying in the basement partially unwrapped. I visited the place where it had been discovered, and found that the wall against which it had lain was stained black. The parcel seemed to have been there for several days, and it was taken to the mortuary that evening, and the remains placed in spirits. On the following morning, assisted by my colleague, I made an examination. The trunk was that of a woman of considerable stature and well nourished. The head had been separated from the trunk by means of a saw. The lower limbs and the pelvis had been removed in the same way. The length of the trunk was 17 inches, and the circumference of the chest 35½ inches and the waist 28½ inches. The parts were decomposed, and we could not discover any wounds. The breasts were large and prominent. The arms had been removed at the shoulder joints by several incisions, the cuts having apparently been made obliquely from above downwards, and then around the arm. Over the body were clearly defined marks, where string had been tied. It appeared to have been wrapped up in a very skilful manner. We did not find marks indicating that the woman had borne any children. On opening the chest we found that the rib cartilages were not ossified, that one lung was healthy, but that the left lung showed signs of severe pleurisy. The substance of the heart was healthy, and there were indications that the woman had not died either of suffocation or of drowning. The liver and stomach, kidneys and spleen were normal. The uterus was absent. There were indications that the woman was of mature age—twenty-four or twenty-five years. She would have been large and well nourished, with fair skin and dark hair. The date of death would have been from six weeks to two months, and the decomposition occurred in the air, not the water. I subsequently examined the arm brought to the mortuary. It was the arm of a woman, and accurately fitted to the trunk; and the general contour of the arm corresponded to that of the body. The fingers were long and taper, and the nails well shaped; and the hand was quite that of a person not used to manual labour.

Was there anything to indicate the cause of death?—Nothing whatever.

Could you tell whether death was sudden or lingering?—All I can say is that death was not by suffocation or drowning. Most likely it was from hemorrhage or fainting.

Can you give any indication of the probable height of the woman?—From our measurements we believed the height to have been 5ft 8in. That opinion depends more upon the measurements of the arm than those of the trunk itself.

Was the woman stout?—Not very stout, but thoroughly plump; fully developed, but not abnormally fat. The inference is that she was a tall, big woman. The hand was long, and was the hand of a woman not accustomed to manual labour.

Did the hand show any sign of refinement?—I do not know that a hand of that kind is always associated with any refinement of mind or body, but certainly it was a refined hand.

Mr. Charles Alfred Hibbert, assistant to Mr. Bond, deposed: I examined the arm on Sept. 16. It was a right arm, and had been separated from the shoulder joint. It measured 31in in length and was 13in in circumference at the point of separation, the wrist being 6½in round, and the hand 7½in long. The arm was surrounded at the upper part with a piece of string, which made an impression on the skin, and when it was loosened there was a great deal of blood in the arm. The hand was long, and the nails small and well shaped. It was the hand of a female. There were no scars or bruises. The arm had apparently been separated after death.

Did the arm seem to have been separated easily?—The operation was performed by a person who knew what he was doing—not by an anatomist, but by a person who knew the joints.

Had the cuts been done by a very sharp knife?—They were perfectly clean. I found that the skin cuts of the arm corresponded with those of the trunk, and that the bones corresponded likewise. The same skill was manifested in both instances. The work was not the work of the dissecting-room—that was obvious. A piece of paper was shown to me as having been picked up near the remains, and it was stained with the blood of an animal.

Was there the mark of any ring on the finger?—No.

Inspector Marshall, of the Criminal Investigation Department, said: About five o'clock on Oct. 2 I went to the new police buildings on the Thames Embankment, and in the basement saw the trunk referred to by previous witnesses. The corner from which it had been taken was pointed out to me, and I saw that the wall was a great deal stained. Examining the ground I found the piece of paper alluded to by the last witness, as well as a piece of string, apparently sash-cord. Dr. Hibbert handed me two pieces of material which had come from the remains. I at once made a thorough search of the vaults, but nothing more was discovered. On the following morning, with other officers, I made a further search of all the vaults, but nothing more was found nor anything suspicious observed. The piece of paper spoken to forms part of an Echo of Aug. 24. Dr. Hibbert handed me a number of small pieces of paper found on the body. They are pieces of the Chronicle, but I cannot yet establish the date. It is not of this year's issue. With respect to the dress it is of broché satin cloth, of Bradford manufacture, but a pattern probably three years old.

Is it a common dress?—It is made of common material. There is one flounce six inches wide at the bottom. The material could probably be bought at 6½d per yard. I have examined the hoarding round the works.

Is it possible to get over it?—There is a place in Cannon-row where a person could easily get over, but there is no indication of anybody having done so. The latch which has been referred to is not likely to have been noticed except by a person acquainted with buildings. The string with which the parcel was tied was a miscellaneous lot. One piece is of sash-cord, and the rest is of different sizes, and there is also a piece of black tape.

Did you form any opinion as to how long the parcel had been where it was found?—From the stain on the wall I certainly thought several days, but the witness Edge told me he was sure it was not there on the previous Saturday.

Edge being recalled repeated his assertion that the remains were not in the vault on the Saturday, as they were discovered in the very place where he looked for the hammer.

The Coroner: Do you think it possible that the parcel was there without your seeing it?—I am sure it was not there.

The inquest was adjourned for a fortnight.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—Will you kindly allow me in your columns to reply to many correspondents who have desired to be informed of the best way to befriend the poor women in Whitechapel, Spitalfields, and the neighbourhood, whose miserable condition has been brought before the public so prominently by the late murders.

I was for ten years rector of Spitalfields, and I know full well the circumstances of these poor creatures, and have been constantly among them by day and by night. A night refuge has been proposed, and it was natural it should suggest itself as a means of benefiting the class. In my judgment it would serve no good end, and I earnestly hope nothing of the kind will be attempted. I am sure it would aggravate the evil. It is not the fact that many of these women are to be found in the streets at night because doors are closed against them. Another night refuge is not required. It would attract more of these miserable women into the neighbourhood, and increase the difficulties of the situation. But what is needed is a home where washing and other work could be done, and where poor women who are really anxious to lead a better life could find employment. There are penitentiaries and there are mission-houses into which younger women can be received. The public generally are little aware of how much good work has been done of late among these. But for the older women, many of whom have only taken to their miserable mode of earning a living in sheer despair, and who would gladly renounce it, we have not the home, and it is of the utmost importance one should be provided. It would in its management differ from the ordinary penitentiary.

If entrusted with means to provide such a home I would gladly take the responsibility of conducting it, in conjunction with the clergy and others, who are only too anxious to see it established. It has oftentimes saddened my heart to be unable to assist the older women, and to save those who were hopelessly falling into a life of sin. Such a home would be a fitting addition to the "Court House," the home for younger penitents at Walthamstow, which bears the name of Mrs. Walsham How, and was founded by her in the time of my predecessor, the present Bishop of Wakefield. If anything is to be done it should be done at once. Two thousand pounds would enable the experiment to be tried, and I have no doubt at all of its being a success.

Pray allow me space to say to ladies who have been moved to devote themselves to work in these parts that I should be delighted to hear from such and to advise them where their services are most required and how they can best give effect to their charitable intentions.

It is my bounden duty to use my position and experience to turn to the best account the painful interest that has been excited by the late events in the East-end.—I am, your obedient servant,

R. C. BEDFORD,
Bishop Suffragan for East London.
Stainforth House, Upper Clapton, E., Oct. 8.

SHELTER FOR DOCK LABOURERS.—Mr. Samuel Montagu, M.P., yesterday introduced a deputation to Colonel Martindale, general manager of the London and St. Katharine Docks, in reference to the provision of shelters for dock labourers while waiting for employment. The deputation included the Rev. T. Greatorex, Mr. C. Davis, Dr. Hanfield Jones, and other gentlemen who have interested themselves in the welfare of the labouring classes in the East-end of London. Mr. Montagu pointed out that the ladies of the Church Extension Society were willing to supply penny dinners to the men if the necessary arrangements could be effected. Colonel Martindale, in reply, said he fully sympathised with the labourers at the docks. The company had about 1,000 men, selected from the casual workers, who were employed at a weekly wage, whether there was work or not. Then there was a second class, to whom yearly tickets were granted, and they were taken on when there was work to be done in preference to the casual labourer. As regards the provision of shelter inside the docks, it must be remembered that there was property to the value of millions on the company's premises, and it was very undesirable that they should have inside the dock walls a number of men who had nothing to do. If, however, the deputation would formulate a scheme by which men could be provided with shelter out of the streets, and practically at the same time outside the docks, he would submit the matter very carefully to the directors. He desired to say that, so far from the dock labourers being the scum of London, as had been asserted, the officials of the company found them, as a whole, sober, respectable, and hard-working men. Mr. Montagu said that a scheme would be prepared for presentation to the directors at an early meeting.

BRITISH DAIRY FARMERS' ASSOCIATION.—In connection with the thirteenth annual dairy show, which opens at the Agricultural Hall to-day, the members of the British Dairy Farmers' Association dined at the Freemasons' Tavern last evening, under the presidency of Mr. W. B. M'Laren, M.P. Professor Axe, in acknowledging the toast of "Success to the Association," proposed by Mr. Alexander Cross, referred to the rapid progress of the society and the widespread influence it had exercised. It was to be hoped, he said, that the efforts of the association would redeem the British farmer from a state of almost absolute ruin to one of hopeful affluence. It had imparted information with respect to cheese and butter making which had been highly fruitful, while it had almost carried out the scheme for establishing a Dairy Institute.—Canon Bagot, in proposing "The Judges and Stewards," expressed a doubt whether the compensation paid by the Government to dairymen whose animals were slaughtered in order to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia was sufficient in view of the fact that their trade might be annihilated at one stroke. It was important, he argued, that there should be one Government standard for milk in all parts of the kingdom instead of the varying standards which now existed. There were hundreds of working men who had never tasted milk as a beverage, and he intended to bring out an automatic machine which would enable them to obtain it.—Mr. Tegetmeier, in reply, urged that agricultural societies should encourage the production of poultry for the table rather than fancy birds. As to poultry farms, they were a myth. They seemed to be a refuge for those who had a few hundred pounds to throw away.—Among the remaining toasts were "The Corporation of London" and "The Chairman."

THE NEW WIMBLEDON.

The following letter has been addressed to the Secretary of the National Rifle Association by the Town Clerk of Brighton, on behalf of the Mayor. It therefore appears that, although the Council of the Association made a most careful investigation of the sites at Cannock Chase and on the Berkshire Downs, no attention whatever has been given to the one at Patcham, near Brighton, which is said by several experts who have visited the ground to meet every requirement:

Town Clerk's Office, Town Hall, Brighton,
Oct. 4, 1888.

SIR—The Mayor of Brighton desires me to advert to your letter of Aug. 24 last, informing me of the decision of the council of the National Rifle Association with reference to the sites which, in their opinion, were the most eligible for the purposes of the annual meetings of the association, and to respectfully express a hope that, as the council of the association at their meeting on Sept. 25 last decided to reopen the question, the sites in the neighbourhood of Brighton suggested by him may receive further and more favourable consideration.

His worship also desires me to renew the official invitation to visit Brighton for the purpose of inspecting the sites shown on the plan left with you by the deputation which he, on behalf of the authorities and inhabitants of the town, gave to the council on the occasion of our interview with them on Aug. 9 last.

The Mayor has not had any intimation that such an inspection of our sites has been made; he therefore assumes that Lord Wantage and the members of the council have hitherto been prevented from coming to Brighton with that object, and he hopes, now that the final selection of a site for the future meetings of the association has been deferred, they will be able to find a convenient opportunity for the purpose, and that they will do him the favour of apprising him of their intention, in order that he may have the honour of accompanying them over the land and furnishing them with such information as he possesses with respect to the suggested sites and the facilities for the meetings which would be available.

The Mayor also wishes me to state that, since the interview and our previous correspondence, he has ascertained from the steward of the Marquis of Abergavenny that his Lordship would be willing either to let on lease for ninety-nine years or to sell a portion of his land in the neighbourhood of Brighton at a price which (unless his Lordship, when he goes over the land required, thinks it is likely to come in for building sites) will not be more, or much more, than the agricultural value.

Requesting you to do me the favour of submitting this communication to the council of the association at the earliest opportunity, I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) F. J. TILLSTONE, Town Clerk.
Captain E. St. John Mildmay, Secretary
National Rifle Association.

THE SALT SYNDICATE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—As my name has been so often referred to by the press in connection with this project, will you permit me, as a large salt manufacturer, to give, through the same medium, a truthful and unvarnished account to the public of the origin of the movement, which I hope will allay the scare, or erroneous impression, if any such exists, that the public is likely to suffer to any serious extent from extravagant prices of salt, either for domestic, manufacturing, or agricultural purposes.

For several years past, owing to the power of production of salt being so much in excess of the demand, the competition has been suicidally severe, and the prices obtained have not only been unremunerative, but ruinous, inasmuch as large sales have been made in many cases at considerably below cost price to enable a certain number of the makers to pay weekly wages and prevent a stoppage of the works, in the hope that better times were not far distant.

A state of things like this, it must be admitted, could not long continue, and many of the manufacturers, finding ruin staring them in the face, were glad to listen to any practicable suggestion to better their position. Appeals were made to me to join, and for some time I held aloof, but failing to see any other arrangement possible to obtain fairly remunerative prices, I at last consented to co-operate, conscientiously believing that whilst it would save many of the salt manufacturers from financial embarrassment the public would not suffer to any material extent. I may remark here that less than one penny per week will, on the average, supply a whole household with domestic salt. For alkali making, chemical works, and for agricultural and fishery purposes, in order to encourage the largest consumption, it will be to the interest of the company to charge the lowest prices consistent with a fair return on the capital invested—such will certainly be my policy and recommendation. It is a stretch of the imagination to assume that the arrangement in question can ever become a dangerous monopoly. I have ever fought against monopolies, and for more than twenty years I laboured hard, in co-operation with some of my Cheshire friends, to put an end to the Indian salt monopoly, and at last we succeeded. I believe I am justified in saying that the directors are all sound, practical men of business, who will hold a large percentage of the entire capital of the company, and I have confidence that no one of them will be so ill-advised as to try to damage our alkali trade, manufacturing chemists, or the agricultural interest of the country by prices above those fairly remunerative for their capital and to enable them to pay their workmen fair wages. I believe I have been what the world calls a successful man of business, and I have found one of the main elements of success has been to try to extend both our home and foreign trade by moderate prices and quick returns.—I have the honour to be, Sir, yours faithfully,

JOHN CORBETT.

Impney, Droitwich, Oct. 6, 1888.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Another step in the westward development of Sclavonic music will have been completed when Mr. Alexander Alexandroff returns to Moscow with his Russian National Opera Company. This gentleman, inspired perhaps by the example of Mr. Dmitri Slaviansky, undertook the gigantic task of touring through Europe with principal artists, chorus, and orchestra for the purpose of demonstrating the lyric drama of his native land. The troupe have been in England for some time, giving stage representations in the principal towns, and it is very much to be regretted that Mr. Alexandroff was unable to obtain a metropolitan theatre for the same purpose. The Russian operas in his repertory—although two of them are already known to London amateurs—would have found a hearty welcome, and his performances all manner of sympathy. Failing a theatre, the director proposes to give six concerts in the Albert Hall during the present week, some of these being, so it is promised, recitals in costume. At the first, which took place last evening, there was, however, nothing better than a programme made up of selections from various sources, not exclusively Russian, with the special feature of choristers wearing, as did Mr. Slaviansky's people, the Russian national dress. A distinct use was made of the orchestra, which is an efficient body of about seventy performers, all, as may be supposed, thoroughly at home with the characteristic music they had to play. Their execution of Glinka's "Jota Aragonese"—a wild and wayward piece—was especially good. This was followed by a Dance Fantasia, the work of the same composer, and one that, some time ago, figured in a Richter Concert programme. Several selections, choral and other, from Glinka's "Life for the Tsar" were given, but these had been heard to better advantage on the stage of Covent-garden Theatre. It chanced, also, that the first vocal solo was familiar to many present. We refer to the baritone scena from Glinka's second opera, "Ruslan and Ludmila," which Mr. Henschel introduced at the opening of his London Symphony Concerts last autumn. The scena will, however, bear many hearings, and deserves its fame as one of the greatest examples of Russian dramatic music. On the stage it must have a very impressive effect, as sung by Ruslan when, in his search for the magician who has robbed him of Ludmila, he comes to a plain strewn with dead men's bones, and knows that there the issue of his quest will be determined. The solo was grandly delivered by Mr. Michael Vinogradoff, whose noble voice and manly style exactly suited it. Another artist, Mr. Vladimir Lubimoff, was heard to advantage in a "Noel" by Adolphe Adam, which had to be repeated. Madame Olga Pouskowa, the prima donna of the company, also made her mark in a valse air by Capri. She has a rich and powerful voice, and uses it with skill and taste. The chorus, though hardly bearing comparison with Mr. Slaviansky's choir, showed itself to be, nevertheless, an efficient body, having great fulness of tone. There was a large attendance, but the director will do well in future to announce his programme beforehand and keep to it. He may also be counselled not to waste too much time between the pieces.

We do not exactly see the raison d'être at such a concert of pieces arranged for ninety-six hands on twenty-four pianofortes, played by forty-eight young ladies from the Guildhall School of Music. However, there they were—the young ladies, the pianofortes, and the selections. But they had, and could have, no serious meaning.

TERRIBLE BALLOON ACCIDENT.—Particulars have been received by the last Canadian mail of a terrible accident which occurred on Wednesday week at the Ottawa Exhibition, one of the attractions of which was a balloon ascent, in which "Professor" Williams, after reaching a height of 1,000ft, was to descend by means of a parachute. Five thousand persons were present to witness the performance. Among the crowd was a young man named Wensley, who had secured a good hold on the rope running around the bottom of the balloon. All was ready and the Professor shouted "Let go," when to the dismay of every one Wensley still maintained his hold on the rope, deaf to all the cries of the crowd to drop. As the balloon ascended rapidly his struggles to tighten his grasp were observed with breathless anxiety. When a height of about 1,000ft was reached he was seen to draw himself up as a last effort to save himself, and then his hold relaxed, and with lightning speed he fell towards the earth. During the first part of the fall he came feet foremost, but suddenly turned a somersault, and with outstretched arms and legs he struck the ground about 300 yards from where the balloon started. The lifeless mass was disfigured almost beyond recognition. Mr. Williams, who was at the moment quite unaware of the terrible tragedy, descended in safety shortly afterwards.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA.—Those who have not yet tried Horniman's Tea are invited to buy a sample packet, and judge for themselves, by comparing with the tea they are using. "Seeing is believing, tasting is the truth!" For amazing strength, rich and delicious flavour, maintenance of health, and best value for money Horniman's Tea is unequalled. List of agents in all papers.—[ADVT.]

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—These pills purify the blood and act most powerfully on the liver, stomach, kidneys, and bowels, thus giving tone, energy, and vigour to the whole system. They are wonderfully efficacious in all ailments incidental to females, young or old, and as a general family medicine for the cure of most complaints are unequalled.—[ADVERTISEMENT.]

POLITICAL SPEECHES.

MR. W. H. SMITH.

Yesterday afternoon the First Lord of the Treasury arrived at Gloucester, and, being met at the railway station by Sir J. Dorington, M.P., and many other local Conservatives, who gave him an exceedingly cordial reception, he was escorted to the Conservative Club, where an address was presented to him. Mr. W. H. SMITH, in reply, said he was grateful for the support which he had received from the majority of the House in the efforts towards preserving the efficiency and power of the Government and its policy. They were not there simply for the maintenance of the interests of a party, but for the benefit of the country—(hear, hear)—to see that law and order were maintained, to see that every individual subject of the Queen was secure in the rights and privileges which belonged to all classes.

In the evening the First Lord of the Treasury attended a dinner of the members of the benefit society connected with the Gloucester Working Men's Conservative Association. In responding to the toast of his health, the right hon. gentleman remarked that to sit on the front bench in the House of Commons would be a most painful and hateful task if he were not supported by a devoted band of followers, and were not assisted most loyally by a body of colleagues of whom it was impossible to speak too highly. Turning to the toast of the friendly society which he had to propose he referred to the eminent services rendered by Lord Iddesleigh in the promotion of those associations of thrift, and to the successful manner in which their principles had been applied. He (Mr. Smith) was certain that, as working people became members of these societies, they would become more self-reliant, keener supporters of law and order, opponents of confiscation, and Conservative in politics.

Later in the evening Mr. Smith attended a meeting of Conservatives in the Shire Hall. The right hon. gentleman, replying to a vote of confidence in the Government and approbation of their Irish policy, said it was not reasonable to suppose that at present there should be universal assent to this resolution in an open meeting of Englishmen; but he trusted that as information became diffused regarding the course the Government had thought it their duty to pursue, they would accord general assent and approval on the part of the masses of the people towards the conduct of the Administration. (Hear, hear.) Reference had been made to the ambition of serving one's country. It was a laudable ambition, shared by his colleagues and himself, who were ready to serve the country as long as the country desired. People talked of the sweets of office. If there were sweets, they were in the approval of one's own conscience and the approbation of the majority of the people of England. There were also, however, anxieties, troubles, and sacrifices, of which few who had not been in office had any conception. (Hear, hear.) He wanted to say a word or two about the work done in the House of Commons during the last session. This work had been done in the face of much difficulty, largely due to a class of men who were disloyal to the House of Commons, and who had become members of it avowedly with the purpose of bringing it into contempt. He thought, nevertheless, that the Government had done good work. They had first passed stricter rules of procedure, which gave some hope of carrying on the business of the country without vexatious delays. (Hear, hear.) Their next task was ably performed by Mr. Goschen—(cheers)—who, with a genius which showed him a master of finance, and with a boldness and skill that had excited the admiration of the whole financial world, had proposed and carried through a scheme which saved the country a million and a quarter sterling a year in the interest of the National Debt, and which, while reducing the burdens of the nation, had increased its credit. There was next the measure called the Railway Rates Bill, which was ably carried through by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. It largely affected the interests of farmers, manufacturers, merchants, and consumers, and he did not doubt that under the able administration of the President of the Board of Trade, it would be found of immense advantage. It had been passed without confiscation or injustice of any kind to the shareholders of the railways, and with a due regard to all the interests affected. (Hear, hear.) Another Act registered was that relating to Imperial Defences. They had all heard of federation. He himself had great sympathy with the idea. Under this Act they had an illustration of what the colonies were ready to do in the direction of federation. It showed the strength of the feeling which bound the colonies to this country. (Hear, hear.) During the last few weeks we had heard of difficulties regarding the Canadian fisheries. Mr. Chamberlain—(cheers)—he (Mr. Smith) was glad to hear that cheer, because when Mr. Chamberlain was appealed to to render service to the country, he consented to do the best he could to bring about a settlement. He effected an arrangement which was held to be just and fair by all parties, and which the President of the United States admitted to be just and equitable—(hear, hear)—but owing to the fact that there was a Presidential election about to take place in the United States, that just and equitable arrangement had not been ratified. It was completely in abeyance at the present time. The people, Government, and Parliament of Canada had, however, exhibited a moderation in the face of this news which entitled them to the admiration of the world. They had not receded a jot or tittle from what was just and right, but they had made no fuss about it. They knew perfectly well the circumstances; they were willing to bide their time; they knew that this country and Canada would obtain from the United States, after they had got through their Presidential election, a just and fair arrangement; and that nothing less than that would be accepted by the people of Canada and England. (Cheers.) The peoples of England and of the United States and Canada were too good friends to quarrel over a question of this kind. Mr. Chamberlain and the United States delegates arrived at a right solution and a difficult and dangerous matter, and the English and Canadians were content to wait for its application, believing it to be perfectly consistent with the honour and interests of the two countries. (Hear, hear.) He might be allowed to say a word about a question which had been talked about during the last few days. It had been said that we were about to give Bechuanaland over to the Government of the Cape of Good Hope. There had been some misconception on the part of the Government of the Cape in this matter. There was no intention to recede from the obligations which we had incurred towards the chiefs and natives of Bechuanaland. We were bound to care for their interests and rights, and her Majesty's advisers believed that at the present time, at all events, those rights and interests would be better protected by the Government of the United Kingdom than by handing Bechuanaland over to the Government of the Cape. In saying this he did not suggest any want of confidence in the Cape Government, but that Government had difficulties of their own to deal with, without being burdened with those of Bechuanaland. (Hear, hear.) He expressed satisfaction that the disturbances which had existed in Zululand had been happily terminated without the shedding of blood—(cheers)—and he especially acknowledged that the Transvaal Government had behaved with marvellous self-control and absolute good faith in regard to these disturbances, and had thus contributed to the settlement. After a reference, also, to the Local Government Act, the right hon. gentleman said the Cabinet had been sustained in these and other labours by the assistance of a devoted band of allies, who but a few years ago were their political opponents, but who, rather than consent to destroy the Constitution, had now become their supporters. He thought the country was under a great debt of gratitude to such men as Lord Hartington and Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons, and Lord Selborne, Lord Northbrook, and Lord Derby in the House of Lords. (Cheers.) It was a matter of vital consequence that a Unionist Government should remain in power. Personally, he should be glad to give place to more than one of the Liberal Unionists, but what the country had got to see was that by some means or other a Unionist Government was maintained in power. (Hear, hear.) They had recently had another illustration of the magnificent insensibility to truth and the marvellous power of misconception and self-deception which characterised their opponents. A great master of oratory in two speeches had managed to convey to his audience the impression that a certain Mr. Mandeville had been killed by his imprisonment in gaol in Ireland. Mr. Balfour recently went through the case from beginning to end, and disposed of every one of the allegations made respecting it. Still Mr. Gladstone, having delivered an ex cathedrâ judgment in the strongest terms, and having been brought thus to book, replies, "With the entire case I have never professed to be acquainted." (Laughter and cheers.) If he were not Mr. Gladstone, strong language might be used regarding him for having thus imposed upon a credulous public. (Hear, hear.) As for the orators who were going about Ireland, they were only comparable to the young gentlemen described by Charles Lamb in one of his essays as voyaging on board the Margate Hoy. They were no hesitating half-storytellers, but thorough-paced liars; they had a marvellous faculty of invention, and an extraordinary volubility of assertion. Accuracy of statement was not deemed by them to be necessary. All they required was to produce an effect. Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon, Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Davitt, Mr. Egan, and Mr. Ford were all members practically of the same party, with one object and purpose, and they must all be held responsible for what was done by the party. An examination of the speeches made by the Parnellites showed that they utterly repudiated the ideas given expression to by Lord Spencer and Mr. Morley in 1886 respecting the subordination of the Irish Parliament under any scheme of Home Rule. They gloried in the doings of the rebels of '98, '48, and '67, and their purpose in agitating for Home Rule was to secure absolute autonomy and ultimate separation. Lord Spencer and Mr. Morley had assured the people of England that the land question would be settled concurrent with Home Rule. The Irish members, on the contrary, were determined to have this left to the Dublin Parliament. In fact, they advocated a species of rebellion, prompted by fraud and robbery. (Hear, hear.) Could there be anything more devilish than this? Their agitation had been demoralising the Irish people. It was necessary that intimidation, boycotting, and moonlighting should be put an end to, and that liberty and security to life and property should be restored in Ireland. It was the bounden duty of the Government to do this. (Cheers.) If it were coercion to get at the instigators of the cruelties which had lately disgraced Ireland, then the Government would be guilty of coercion. (Cheers.) They meant to secure for the subjects of the Queen in Ireland the liberty which was enjoyed by her subjects in England. Let all who valued liberty unite as one man in the support of this valuable inheritance. Let them give security to the lives and property of their fellow-subjects in Ireland, and insist that wrong should not be done anywhere under the sanctity and the authority of the Queen. (Loud cheers.)

The meeting closed with the usual votes of thanks.

MR. JOHN MORLEY.

The Right Hon. J. Morley, who was accompanied by Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., Mr. Stuart Rendel, M.P., Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., Mr. W. Abrahams, M.P. (Rhondda), Mr. A. J. Williams, M.P., Mr. Humphreys Owen (chairman of the North Wales Liberal Federation), and others, arrived in Newtown (Montgomeryshire) yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of addressing a series of meetings in connection with the Welsh National Council. Notwithstanding the wet weather a great crowd awaited the arrival of the train, and when Mr. Morley appeared he was greeted with prolonged cheering. A procession was formed, and, headed by a brass band, marched to an hotel in the town, where a temporary platform was erected. Here the chair was taken by Mr. Humphreys Owen.

MR. MORLEY, after thanking those present for his reception, said no Liberals had been more staunch than those of Wales, although he confessed that in 1886, when the election took place, many Liberals had serious misgivings as to how Wales might go. In the first place, it was thought that there was a feeling not entirely of friendliness between the Welsh and the Irish in matter of competition for work; and they knew, in the second place, that attempts had been made, not very creditable to those who made them, to stir up the baleful fires of religious antipathy. Those apprehensions proved to be groundless. Wales returned an almost solid vote for Mr. Gladstone and his policy. (Cheers.) After coming through an ordeal of that kind triumphantly, they need not fear anything that was likely to happen to the Liberalism of Wales. He had no fear for the people of England; he had no fear for the people of Scotland; and when the time came for the opinion of the country to be tested at the polls, they would see assuredly that the country had been staunch throughout.

After a few remarks from Mr. Osborne Morgan and Mr. Abraham the meeting separated.

In the evening a public meeting was held in the Victoria Hall, admission being by ticket. There was a crowded attendance, and Mr. Stuart Rendel, M.P., presided.

MR. MORLEY on rising was loudly cheered. He said he had at one time thought that there was a chance of the Irish question being solved without the expedient of a separate Legislature, but circumstances had altered this view, and he contended that every honest man was entitled to make such a change of opinion. (Cheers.) He wished to ask them what advance had been made in the Irish question since the election of two years and a half ago. At that time the friends of Mr. Gladstone were beaten, and it was prophesied that if there were another election they would be utterly wrecked, and that all that was required to quiet Ireland was a period of firm and resolute government. How had these prophecies been fulfilled? Lord Hartington, in his recent speech at Inverness, had laid down three propositions which would answer that question. He said first that the Irish party was now supported by a great and powerful party in England numbering not much less than half the voting power of Great Britain. The Gladstonian Liberals were no longer the rump of a broken party. (Cheers and laughter.) In the second place Lord Hartington said a state of things existed in Ireland in some parts not far removed from civil war and rebellion. So that "firm and resolute government" had not accomplished its work. Thirdly, his lordship said that, so long as the temper of the Irish people remained what it was, and the policy of a great party in this country remained what it was, then an alternative policy on the part of the Unionists—a constructive policy—was almost an impossibility. Take these three propositions as they would, he contended that in them they had the most complete confession of failure, of impotence, of helplessness, of hopelessness that was ever made by a party leader. (Cheers.) The policy of the Unionists had brought the country to a dead-lock, for there was going to be no reversal on the part of Liberals. It was no use Unionists going about the country with a catechism in one hand and a birch-rod in the other. (Cheers and laughter.) The result of the policy which had been pursued during the past two years was that the Unionist party was doomed. (Cheers.) The Unionists, referring to the Home Rule agitation in Wales, said that by advocating the Home Rule policy in Ireland the Liberals had called up a monster which they were very anxious to keep in order, but that the monster would end by making them his slaves. But it was not they who had roused the Welsh question. Those who said they did, forgot the extension of the franchise and the ballot. Did people suppose that when the franchise was extended the new voters were going to make no new demands? That extension meant that they had had enough of driving all social discontent beneath the surface. (Cheers.) One of the great questions in which Wales was interested was that of intermediate education. Mr. Mundella brought in several bills in different years to secure this. A Tory Government promised support, but refused to grant a committee, so that seven years after the report was made the question was exactly where it was before. Could they wonder, then, that there was growing up a Welsh question? (Cries of "No.") Then there was the land. The Richmond Commission, appointed in 1879 to inquire into the land question, undoubtedly dealt with Wales in a manner that had proved unsatisfactory and insufficient. The Welsh members showed that the English system could not be successfully applied in Wales in the face of differences of language, creed, and politics. There was, therefore, a strong and irresistible case for inquiry, but the Tory Government, being a government of landlords, left the Welsh farmer, than whom there was no harder worker, to struggle with enormous difficulties. Could they wonder that such slack and sluggish apathy was making a Welsh question. It was that apathy and indifference that made the Irish question. Then they had seen another remarkable phenomenon in Wales—namely, the passive resistance to the law in the form of the anti-tithe agitation. The Government had brought in a bill to end the question, but that bill reminded him of the work of the class in London known as "jerry builders." The work was not intended to last, and the relations between landlord and tenant, already strained, would probably be aggravated. Then with regard to the Church—that was another question which would have to be faced. He had no inclination to treat the Church question except as a purely political question. (Cheers.) It was to Liberals a question of political justice. It was a question of the highest national expediency, building up peace, contentment, and concord in a portion of her Majesty's dominions. He knew lawyers said that there was complete legislative, ecclesiastical, historical, and constitutional identity between the four dioceses in Wales and the Church in England; but behind the dust of this question lay the hard fact that the Church property went to the service and advancement of a small minority of the population. Coming to the question of local government, what they had to do was to see that in Wales, as in Scotland and in Ireland, machinery was provided for carrying out, so far as was consistent with justice to the interests of the realm as a whole, the wishes and the interests of the population. He never had expected identity of machinery where the difficulties to be met with were not identical. The condition of Ireland demanded that all the energy of all her sons should be employed in lifting up and regenerating their miserable land. (Cheers.) The history of Wales was different, and what English Liberals desired to do was to listen to the demands, to do what they could to meet them, but not to be drawn into a trap to commit themselves to accept identical machinery where the cases were not identic. (Cheers.) He hoped that in Wales they would leave no stone unturned to make the new County Councils as national and as powerful as possible. He regretted that they had not been clothed with greater powers, but there was a section which empowered combination among counties, and he looked forward to the growth and extension of a desire in Wales for some general representative authority for the general administrative purposes of the principality. (Cheers.) The first question was the Irish question. Nothing could be done until that was disposed of, but when it was out of the way they could deal with others. (Hear, hear.) Meanwhile other questions were ripening. They were being pressed into the minds of the people. They were making their way into the minds of members of Parliament who represented English constituencies, and into the minds of the English constituencies themselves. (Hear, hear.) With sobriety, with judgment, and with loyalty to one another, they might be quite sure that when the next general election came the Liberal party would take a great step forward in securing a Parliament which should represent their principles, and which would once more govern the country with justice, with wisdom, and with power. (Loud cheers.)

A resolution was then carried, heartily welcoming Mr. Morley to Wales, recognising in him one of the most strenuous of Mr. Gladstone's fellow labourers.

THE COLLISION IN THE TAGUS

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

PARIS, Oct. 8.—It is semi-officially announced to-day that in regard to the indemnities due by the British Government on account of the collision in the Tagus between the ironclad Sultan and the steamship Ville de Victoria, a first payment of 500,000 francs has been made, which has been distributed among the parties interested.

It is added: "A further sum of the same amount remains to be distributed, but legal questions have arisen which have been referred to a court of law, thus causing delay. The British Government has declared, however, that it will accept the decision of the judges, and it appears certain that the matter will be settled without difficulty."

SHIPBUILDING ACTIVITY.

From Lloyd's return for the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1888, issued yesterday, it appears that a remarkable increase has taken place in the amount of work in progress at the shipbuilding yards in the United Kingdom. The number of vessels in course of construction is recorded at 400, against 249 in the corresponding quarter of last year, the gross tonnages being 698,995 and 394,3[illegible] respectively. Of late the advance has been rapid, and it continues so; for as compared with the quarter ending June of this year there is an addition of 90,877 tons building, and at the end of September there were 16[illegible] vessels aggregating 351,281 tons for the construction of which preparations were being made, against 82 of 179,561 tons three months previously. Of the 400 vessels building, 260, with a gross tonnage of 483,022, are for the United Kingdom; 6, with a total burthen of 6,47[illegible] tons, for the Colonies; and 13 (tonnage, 36,916) for Germany.

THE ARMADA.—The unanimous praise bestowed upon this historical drama and grand spectacle by the leading press of the country is nightly endorsed by the crowded audiences which fill Drury-lane Theatre at each performance.

THE ARMADA.—It is impossible in an advertisement to give an idea of the volumes that have been written enthusiastically commending this play to the attention of the lovers of the artistic, the beautiful, and the true.

THE ARMADA.—Times says: "A great success was achieved, and the fame of the theatre as the home of spectacular displays cannot fail to be increased by this latest addition to their number. Nor does the production lack merit in other directions. The authors of 'The Armada,' inspired by the thoughts which the tercentenary of the great naval conflict suggests, have set themselves to write a play which shall be fresh and interesting, and shall not depend exclusively for success upon mere scenic effect. The times and events which they have chosen for reproduction on the stage are among the most stirring in the whole annals of British history; they supply abundant opportunities for appealing to the patriotic sentiment, and they bristle with romantic and picturesque incident."

THE ARMADA.—Times says: "The great naval display, which can be called no less than a triumph of stage artifice, was received on Saturday with shouts of applause, and if it stood alone would be sufficient to attract the public for many a day. At the fall of the curtain there was loud and prolonged applause."

THE ARMADA.—Daily Telegraph says: "In a scene of general excitement, Mr. Augustus Harris on Saturday night succeeded in launching one of the mightiest, most showy, and costly vessels that has ever been built in the dramatic docks of Drury-lane. The sea-fight between the Armada and the English war-vessels off Calais may be pronounced the most effective historical picture ever realised on the modern stage. The murky gloom of the atmosphere, the lurid light thrown on the opposing vessels, the awful fusillade of firing, the shouting and cheering of the sailors, the marvellous moving of the vessels to give the enemy a broadside, make up a scene so novel and impressive that it will not readily be forgotten. This Armada fight, in its design, its daring, and its execution, will be quoted as one of the boldest achievements ever attempted on the Drury-lane stage. This scene alone will attract all London."

THE ARMADA.—Daily Telegraph says: "In his pictures of the Inquisition Mr. Harris has been careful not to give offence. All was done in scrupulous good taste. In the final scene once more we beheld a triumph of stage management and a brilliant flash of colour. It is a scene that will linger on the memory. Queen Elizabeth has to pass, under a baldachino, to Old St. Paul's, to make thanksgiving for the safety of her country. It is a procession of accurate costume, and those who would understand what Elizabeth's reign was like so far as it outwardly appeared can see it here. The old cathedral dedicated to St. Paul, the Cross, and the citizens appear here just as they were three centuries ago. This will be a picture that will be appreciated alike by the student and the sight-seer. 'The Armada' is one of the most distinctly creditable things that Mr. Harris has ever done. 'The Armada' is a noteworthy advance on anything that has been recently attempted in giving artistic and thoughtful work to a popular stage. Such enterprises must succeed."

THE ARMADA.—Standard says: "Mr. Augustus Harris has chosen for the date of his new play a remarkably picturesque and stirring period of English history. . . . An extraordinarily effective series of stage pictures has been supplied. The great sea fight between the Armada and the English fleet created much enthusiasm and astonishment. The brilliant procession to St. Paul's, whither Elizabeth goes in great state and triumph to return thanks for victory over the enemy, is among the most magnificent and effective of the many wonderful scenes which have made Mr. Harris's management famous."

THE ARMADA.—Daily News says: "The authors of 'The Armada' have drunk deep of the sentiment of the most stirring and the most truly national episode of our annals. The story undoubtedly interested and amused the spectators. The dialogue is exceptionally good. The great battle off Calais is the most striking feature and the scenic climax of the play. The characteristics of the fight, with the huge Spanish and Portuguese galleons and galleasses looming large in the glare of the fire-ships, and exchanging broadsides with the English ships, amidst the crash of falling spars and the cheers and boardings of the English sailors, were happily portrayed, and were all very stirring and rich in picture. Next to this for breadth and massive effect was the crowded yet well composed scene of the auto-da-fé in the grand square of Cadiz, and the imposing closing spectacle of the Queen's triumphal entry into Old St. Paul's. 'The Armada' may safely be assumed to be launched upon a long and prosperous career."

THE ARMADA.—Morning Post says: "In 'The Armada' Messrs. Henry Hamilton and Augustus Harris have hit upon a happy idea that will bring substantial reward to them, and will at the same time supply for months to come a great deal of enjoyment for the playgoing public. We may heartily congratulate the authors on the work they have done. As a drama there will be found an ample store of interest and excitement, pathos and humour, while nothing has ever been presented at Drury-lane Theatre to equal 'The Armada' as a spectacle. All the resources of scenic and mechanical art have been employed to give these scenes reality and picturesque effect. They not only delight the eye, but they are interesting as a record of heroic days. A stirring appeal is made to the patriotism of the playgoer, while success is further assured by the unbounded liberality of the management in placing the drama upon the stage. The exciting events on the English coast are varied and contrasted with vivid incidents in Spain, all the details of which are carried out in the most realistic manner, displaying the skill and artistic taste of the manager to the greatest advantage."

THE ARMADA.—Morning Post says: "It is the fight off Calais that most excites the audience. Nothing like this nautical spectacle has ever been attempted before, and the exciting and realistic effects were greeted with deafening cheers. Warm commendation may be given to the principal members of the company. When the curtain fell Messrs. Harris and Hamilton were twice called to the front, and a speech was requested from the manager, who, however, contented himself with the simple question, 'Is the play a success?' The shout of applause that followed was the gratifying response to the managerial query, and we may therefore anticipate that 'The Armada' will keep its place in the Drury-lane bill until Christmas at least. The drama has all the elements of a popular piece. All these considerations, combined with the emphatic verdict of approval given by the crowded audience, lead us to predict with confidence the permanent popularity of the new Drury-lane drama."

THE ARMADA.—Chronicle says: "A healthful and invigorating breeze of patriotic sentiment surges through the new drama produced with unmistakable success on Saturday evening; and when the authors had been twice summoned at the final fall of the curtain, the question put by Mr. Harris, standing before the footlights, 'Is the piece a success?' was answered with a spontaneous burst of applause that left no doubt of the nature of the verdict. . . . 'The Armada' is not merely a 'show piece.' Constructively the piece has considerable claims to respect, whilst its national spirit is irresistible."

THE ARMADA.—Chronicle says: "The spectacular effects were alike remarkable for splendour of embellishment, realistic attributes, and the ease with which they were made to grow out of the story. It all fits so well together, and in each of the principal scenes so much taste and judgment are manifested, as to leave no room for doubt that during the 10 weeks between now and the period when the extensive stage will be required for the active rehearsal of the pantomime, the picturesque and graphic illustration of the manner in which England was saved from a great danger three centuries back will be witnessed not only by habitual playgoers, but by many persons who restrict their visits to the theatre to altogether exceptional occasions."

THE ARMADA.—Chronicle says: "In its scenic treatment, the consistency of its dramatic surroundings, in the grouping, and bold attack of immense mechanical and other difficulties, the production of 'The Armada' must rank among Mr. Harris's proudest achievements at Drury-lane. The terrific combat off Calais, it is scarcely too much to say, is the finest of the spectacular efforts of the grimmer kind ever seen on this or any other stage. The desperate fight is awe-compelling, yet fascinating. No wonder that applause is hushed whilst the battle is in progress. But directly the curtain falls on this wonderful representation of the defeat of the Armada the enthusiastic burst of applause demonstrates that the chord of national feeling has been sounded, and that the manager has gained another stage triumph. Both as a stage picture and as a striking dramatic incident, this scene bids fair to be the talk of metropolitan playgoers ere the week has ended. But with this Mr. Harris does not exhaust his marvels of brilliant and realistic spectacle."

THE ARMADA.—Chronicle says: "The play ends with a gorgeous procession of the Queen to Old St. Paul's to return thanks for the national victory. Here we get wealth of display, controlled by perfect taste and historical accuracy. The reception of Queen Elizabeth by her subjects, and her energetic response, terminating with 'God save you, my people,' brings to a close a drama as spirited in its action as it is glowing and historically accurate in its mise-en-scène. 'The Armada' must also be named among the attractions of a drama that is in every respect equal to Mr. Augustus Harris's preceding productions, whether as part author, as untiring stage manager, or as enterprising lessee of the handsome building that with 'The Armada' has more than ever a valid claim to be regarded as the 'national theatre.'"

THE ARMADA.—Globe says: "The first night's performance passed without a solitary hitch or mishap. One scene may claim to be the most elaborate that has ever been put upon the stage. The sea fight is probably the most elaborate and successful picture of a combat ever put upon the stage. Nothing so good as this has been previously done at Drury-lane. Nothing had been spared in the way of costume or scenery that could add splendour and dignity to the representation. A more elaborate or more successful piece has not, in short, been given under the present most spirited manager, and 'The Armada' will count with the most conspicuous of Drury-lane triumphs."

THE ARMADA.—Advertiser says: "Drury-lane was crowded to excess on Saturday night, and, as might have been expected, patriotism rose to fever height, both on the stage and in the front. Mr. Harris has produced a series of stage pictures as remarkable for historical accuracy in their details as for gorgeousness in their appointments. Nothing could be more vivid in its realism, more exciting, or more ingeniously contrived than the scene of the sea-fight off Calais between the English and the Spaniards. It is seen but for a few minutes, but is the triumph of the whole spectacle. 'The Armada' is, in effect, a noteworthy example of what can be done by the aid of taste, skilful stage management, modern appliances, and last, but far from least, a lavish outlay of capital. Mr. Augustus Harris has, in the preparation of this historical pageant, shown even more than his accustomed liberality, but that he will be reimbursed in a prosperous run of the piece is certain. The wonderfully realistic scene of the sea fight, assuredly the finest thing of the kind ever presented on the London stage. It may be safely assumed that Drury-lane will ring with vociferous applause every night this splendid scene is presented."

THE ARMADA.—Sportsman says: "No more fitting subject for a national drama at our national theatre could have been thought of by an astute and spectacle-loving manager. Mr. Harris and Mr. Hamilton have found a capital subject for introducing a powerful and romantic love story, and the result of Saturday night's premiere at the 'Lane' was a big success. The new drama should not only attract crowds until the Christmas pantomime elbows it off the boards, but return to it again when clown and pantaloon have had their day. Act III. opens with one of the most gorgeous scenes that has ever been put upon the stage. When the play concluded Mr. Harris and Mr. Hamilton came to the footlights in reply to loud calls. 'Is the play a success?' asked the former, and the ayes in reply were not only in a majority, but unanimous."

THE ARMADA.—Echo says: "The story is well told. Presented, with marvellous detail, a series of tableaux that rouses enthusiasm in the audience. The remaining and most brilliant spectacle with which the play terminates represents with surpassing loveliness and dazzling effect the procession to St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Harris, called upon for a speech, asked, 'Is the play a success?' an answering shout went up assuring him that he had once more hit the popular taste."

THE ARMADA.—Sporting Life says: "Mr. Augustus Harris is to be congratulated on his greatest achievement. 'The Armada' will, no doubt, fill Drury-lane Theatre to overflowing until it shall please the manager to make a change in the bill."

THE ARMADA.—Pall Mall Gazette says: "'Is the piece a success?' was the question put by Mr. Harris as he appeared in front of the curtain with his collaborateur. Enthusiastic cheers burst from the audience by way of reply. Their verdict was conclusive, and is not to be appealed from. 'The Armada' will, we are assured, attract playgoers to Drury-lane for months to come."

THE ARMADA.—Evening News says: "'The Armada,' in fine, is a sound melodrama of the regulation school, enriched by scenic effects that make it one of the most magnificent spectacles ever seen in Drury-lane. It should draw all London."

THE ARMADA.—St. James' Gazette says: "Such a 'tercentenary celebration' as could not well be attempted elsewhere. By far the best thing which even Mr. Harris has achieved."

THE ARMADA.—Citizen says: "Need we say 'The Armada' is a gigantic success. By now every one knows it is. More to the purpose, therefore, is it to advise our readers to book well in advance."

He is no longer the more conventional villain. He is a man of heart as well as a man of brains, and his love scene with Miss Alma Murray in its manliness, its grip of passion, and its welcome sincerity, reveals the popular actor in a new light. Mr. Willard is not the accepted stage lover, the pretty pleader, the curled darling, the [illegible]; but a man who makes love with his brains as well as his lips. It was a [illegible] picture, [illegible], original, and grateful, that [illegible] between Mr. Willard and Miss Alma Murray, sheltering under the old boughs of a ruined oak."

GLOBE.—THE MONK'S ROOM.—TO-NIGHT.

In appearance and manner he might have sat for the old fellow, powerful in feature and dignified in death, [illegible] his fist when Robert Browning saw him stretched on the marble death bed of the Morgue."

GLOBE THEATRE.—THE MONK'S ROOM.—The Daily Telegraph: "'The Monk's Room' should be seen by all who appreciate good acting." Sportsman: "'The Monk's Room' was admirably staged. . . . GLOBE.—THE MONK'S ROOM.—TO-NIGHT.—Topical Times: "Mr. Lart's play is a terse, virile drama, with a strong and interesting plot, effective situations, a powerful love interest, and a startling and dramatic climax. The writing is excellent, and betrays knowledge, scholarly work. Mr. Lart has won his battle with 'The Monk's Room.' The verdict was given unanimously in his favour. 'The Monk's Room' will fill the Globe Theatre for many weeks."

THE MONK'S ROOM.—GREAT SUCCESS.—Whitehall Review: "'The Monk's Room' at the Globe Theatre is a play of such earnestness and substantiality that it deserves to succeed, and succeed it doubtless will. ### LONDON, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9.

Addressing a public meeting in Gloucester, last evening, Mr. W. H. Smith acknowledged a resolution expressing confidence in the Government, and especially approving of their Irish policy. He reviewed the work of the past session, spoke of the valuable assistance rendered by the Liberal Unionists, and urged on the country the desirability of strengthening the existing alliance.

Mr. John Morley visited Newtown, Montgomeryshire, yesterday, to deliver the first of a series of addresses under the auspices of the Welsh National Liberal Federation. The right hon. gentleman was most cordially received. In his principal address he declared that it was the apathy of the Government which had produced the Irish question, and it was no wonder that similar indifference with regard to Wales had created a Welsh movement.

During the quarter ending Sept. 30, as appears from Lloyd's returns, there was an immense increase in the number and tonnage of vessels in course of construction in the shipbuilding yards of this kingdom. The comparison is favourable whether applied to the immediately preceding quarter or to the corresponding period of last year.

From a letter which has just been addressed by Mr. Walter Prideaux to Mr. Evan Spicer, and which is published in another column, it will be seen that the Goldsmiths' Company have made a proposal to the Charity Commissioners for the foundation and endowment of an Industrial and Recreative Institute at New-cross. From the surplus of the City charities it is intended that the Commissioners shall set apart £2,500 a year, to which the Company will add an endowment of a similar amount. Subject to the approval of Parliament, the Commissioners have accepted the scheme. Mr. Spicer estimates the value of the Company's gift at £85,000.

Mr. John Troutbeck, coroner for Westminster, yesterday opened an inquest upon the remains of the woman found in a vault of the new police office on the Embankment. Several of the workmen in the employ of the contractor who is making the alterations in the buildings gave evidence as to the discovery of a parcel containing the trunk of a female, and other witnesses spoke to the finding of a woman's arm in the Thames. Dr. Bond said this arm corresponded with the body, which he thought was that of a woman twenty-four or twenty-five years of age, large and well-nourished, with fair skin and dark hair. The hand was evidently that of a person not used to manual labour. He added that death had taken place six weeks or two months ago, and that decomposition had occurred in the air, not in water. The inquiry was adjourned.

It is reported that last night the police made an arrest in connection with the East-end crimes, to which at first considerable importance was attached. The police authorities at Leman-street, however, do not appear to have regarded the case as a serious one, for at midnight no one was detained in custody at that station.

Sir Charles Warren, it is stated, has decided on the employment of bloodhounds in the event of any more murders similar to those which have recently occurred in Whitechapel.

Yesterday the remains of Catherine Eddowes, who was assassinated in Mitre-square, Aldgate, early on the morning of Sunday, the 30th ult., were buried in the City Cemetery at Ilford. The funeral was attended by several of the relatives of the deceased and by a large crowd of the poor of the East-end.

Mary Hawkes, aged eighteen, and James Fordham, twenty-one, were brought before Mr. Montagu Williams, at Worship-street, yesterday, charged with being concerned with others in robbing a Swede, named Hellman, of £4 and a pair of trousers. It appeared that the prosecutor was inveigled by women into a lodging-house in Flower and Dean-street, where, it is alleged, he was almost immediately set upon by four or five men and robbed. The magistrate ordered a remand.

William Russell was charged at Bow-street yesterday with stealing a quantity of household furniture belonging to Michael Donworth, an Irish labourer. The prosecutor emigrated to America, hoping to better his condition, leaving his wife with a comfortable house and money to go on with. On returning recently he found his home broken up, and his wife and family starving. All this was attributed to the prisoner, whose conduct, according to the statements of the prosecutor and his wife, was marked by the most extraordinary depravity and brutality. The magistrate adjourned the case for a week.

Yesterday the Stock Markets opened steadier, but afterwards relapsed, owing to reported financial difficulties in Paris. Foreign Government bonds receded, especially Spanish. Home railways showed comparative firmness, and Canadian and Mexican (Vera Cruz) improved, but American were mostly lower, although finally above the worst. Consols rose 1-16 per cent. At the Bank £60,000 in gold was received from Paris.

GLOUCESTER was yesterday reminded of the approach of an Autumn Session, and of the claims of politics on the attention of its citizens, by the visit and one or two speeches from the First Lord of the Treasury. Mr. W. H. SMITH devoted the commencement of his principal address to a survey of the work which the Government had performed during last Session, and of the obstacles which had confronted them. It is necessary now and again thus to remind the country of the solid legislative achievements of the Administration, because it is a commonplace with Gladstonians that no good thing can possibly come out of a Unionist majority. What work was accomplished—and neither in quantity nor in quality is it otherwise than excellent—was performed, as Mr. Smith brought to the recollection of his hearers, in face of the persistent obstructive opposition of Members whom he described as "disloyal to the House of Commons." It naturally increases the physical wear and tear to Ministers that such obstacles should have to be encountered. Mr. Smith, indeed, spoke last night as if there were a bitter mockery in the expression "the sweets of office." Certainly he is correct in saying that few people have any conception of the amount of worry and self-sacrifice which those who serve the country in office have to undergo; and this applies almost as much to a Liberal as to a Conservative Administration. It is, therefore, all the more needful that the time of Parliamentary holiday should be treated as holiday; and Mr. W. H. Smith would have been amply justified in sparing himself from the additional labour of vacation oratory. What he says is always weighty and full of ripe experience. But there is such a thing as husbanding one's resources for the good of one's country and one's political party. It is no secret that the Leader of the House of Commons has been in town during a great portion of the recess, and that he has devoted himself with his usual assiduity to the details of the measures to be submitted to Parliament next month. In fact, Mr. Smith may fairly claim to be the "business man" of the Government, and if he did so he would be certain to "have the claim allowed" by each and all of his colleagues. The faculty of being able to master dry detail, to organise legislative successes, and to make proposed measures solid as well as brilliant, is one the usefulness of which can hardly be exaggerated. In bringing this invaluable quality to the counsels of the Government Mr. Smith has really contributed much more than by a series of rhetorical triumphs, and, in addition to this unseen work, he has also the extremely delicate and difficult function of "leading" the hosts of the Unionists in the Lower Chamber—an office which even his opponents allow that he performs with unfailing good temper and ready tact. In view of these admitted facts, the First Lord may well speak with some sarcasm of the delights of sitting on the coveted Front Bench.

The reference to the Canadian view of the Fisheries Treaty which Mr. Smith made shows that the Government are alive to the possible consequences of the rejection of that measure, and will give satisfaction in the Dominion. It is satisfactory, too, to be assured that Bechuanaland is not to be lost sight of, and that the Transvaal Government has recently acted with conspicuous good faith. Perhaps Mr. Smith's most forcible utterances were those on the ever-present topic of Ireland. He emphatically repeated the determination of the Ministry to uphold the law and the rights of individual liberty, and paid a warm tribute to the support received from the Liberal Unionist leaders. That the Irish Nationalists are suffering from a feeling of political depression and disappointment is rendered tolerably apparent from the desperate attempts which they are making to whip up popular sentiment for a new anti-landlord crusade. Mr. Dillon, fresh from imprisonment, has written a letter urging the Tipperary "boys" to "strike one more blow for the old cause," and let themselves be heard of this winter. He wishes to see the men of Tipperary throwing themselves into the struggle of the forthcoming winter—which he declares is sure to be a fierce struggle—with all their old fire and courage. It seems that Mr. Dillon is not well enough to appear on public platforms just now, but is ordered a few weeks' rest, after which time he hopes to be on active service again. The written word, however, is often quite as potent as the spoken harangue; and if the violent epistle which he has just addressed to the men of Tipperary is a specimen of Mr. Dillon's "rest," it will be interesting to observe what his platform work will resemble. We must not, however, conceal from ourselves the fact that there is a possibility that Mr. Dillon will have a longer period of freedom from public speaking than he at present contemplates. The Government, with all their desire to spare a physically weak foe, cannot allow Mr. Dillon to incite to breaches of the law, either by letters or in speeches. Nobody can complain because Mr. Dillon sees in the Land Courts mere instruments of oppression—this is only the professional obliquity of vision which an Irish agitator is bound to cultivate. But no patriot, however consumptive, can be allowed to hound on a peasantry to violent and illegal courses for very long without himself coming into collision with the law that he defies. The Government can, it is true, afford to look on with a certain degree of complacency at the spectacle of a Nationalist leader soundly rating his followers because they are tired of an agitation which brings them no profit, and only leads to eviction or imprisonment. This is satisfactory as far as it goes. It shows that the "game of law and order" is a winning game: but those who would reverse the process, and stir up social strife anew, cannot, of course, be allowed to do so with entire impunity. Mr. Dillon and other spirits of the forward school will have to consider their position and decide whether they will carry on the agitation of the autumn and winter with due respect to the Statute Book. It can hardly be called promising that Mr. Dillon should write as violently as he has done, or that Mr. John O'Connor should feel constrained to compare Mr. Balfour to the Whitechapel murderer.

While Mr. Smith was discussing the general task of the Ministry at Gloucester, Mr. Morley was engaged at Newtown in delivering a speech about Wales and the Welsh, which shows that his instincts in statesmanship are English and sound. There was, of course, the necessary allusion to Irish matters. Mr. Morley extracts from Lord Hartington's recent speech at Inverness the conclusion that the Unionist policy is convicted of failure and that the Unionist party is doomed. It is easier to deal with the former proposition than with the latter, which partakes of the nature of prophecy, in which it is quite possible for even Mr. Morley, as an amateur, to prove mistaken. In Mr. Morley's view the failure consists in the fact that the Unionist party is not as yet prepared to grant increased local government to Ireland. This can only mean that during its two years of office the Government ought to have reduced Ireland to such a point of orderliness and contentment that even the Parnellite Members themselves would accept the gift of local councils with joy and gratitude, as a satisfactory substitute for Home Rule. Will Mr. Morley, however, contend that under any circumstances the pacification of Ireland can be so marvellously speedy? Let us grant Home Rule of Mr. Gladstone's pattern: would discontent have vanished from Ireland, and all memory of the wrongs and grievances of centuries have died away in a couple of years? The difference between the Unionists and Mr. Morley is that the latter is willing to try a bold and almost desperate experiment—of entrusting to men who are now foes the weapons that may be used against us, in the hope that they will not be so used; while the Unionists, before increasing the self-governing powers of Irishmen, wish for some assurance that the privilege so granted will not be misused. As regards the exact time at which it will be safe to extend the bounds of local rule in Ireland and to begin the work of decentralisation, Lord Hartington holds one view, and other leaders of the Liberal Unionists hold a different opinion; but the common sense of the position seems to be that until the extreme hopes of the Gladstonian Home-Rulers are laid aside—which will not be until after another General Election—the time will hardly have come for any extensive meddling with local Irish institutions. But Mr. Morley did not confine his attention to Ireland. He was speaking in Wales, and had to do his best to show that Wales also was languishing for want of Parliamentary attention. It is, however, significant that even Mr. Morley is not prepared to establish Parliaments all over the kingdom just yet. He denies that when a Parliament is set up in Dublin—an event which he speaks of as certain—there will be any necessity to create a similar body for Wales or Scotland. "Identity of machinery" when the circumstances are not identical he eschews. This is, so far, a promising sign. It shows that even the hope of the Radicals will stay his hand in bringing about the legislative disruption of the three kingdoms. All that Mr. Morley seems to assert is that there is a "Welsh question," and that there is no wonder that a Welsh question should have arisen, considering the way in which Wales has been neglected as regards the land, the Church, and intermediate education. He does not attempt to prove, however, and does not apparently believe, that the Parliament at Westminster is unable to remedy any just grievances of the Welsh people. This is a hopeful symptom, and shows that Mr. Morley still retains some of the Imperial instincts of the patriotic English Minister underlying his theoretical affection for Home Rule.

The phonograph is the spoiled child of science for the hour, and its suggested applications are innumerable. The latest is in the domain of politics. It is announced that one of Mr. Edison's instruments is to be placed on the platform, at Birmingham, next month, while Mr. Gladstone is speaking. It will receive and record his speech, and then will be "carried about the country, to redeliver, with all Mr. Gladstone's inflections, intonations, and accents, the oration of the night." One critic thinks it will be "curious to note the effect of Mr. Gladstone's speeches without his presence; for more impressive than voice or accent is Mr. Gladstone's personality. A public meeting will hardly be overwhelmed by a ticking instrument on the platform, as it is by the face and figure of Mr. Gladstone in earnest controversy." This is true, but perhaps the organising officials of the Liberal party may go further. They may borrow from Madame Tussaud a wax figure of the eminent politician, so that the audience can gaze on his lineaments and costume as they listen to the reproduction of his voice. Or the imitation might take a livelier shape. There are actors in London who, by the help of natural facilities and the art of theatrical "make-up," could give a faithful presentment of the Leader of the Opposition. This was actually done some years ago in the case of a burlesque by Mr. Gilbert of one of his own plays; though the life-like mimicry of certain distinguished members of the Government gave offence and was suppressed by the censorship. Such a gentleman as the actor who impersonated him in "The Happy Land," if retained for the night to convey to the spectators an idea of Mr. Gladstone's manner, appearance, and gestures, might move his lips, body, and arms in dumb show, while the faithful phonograph did the rest. All this, if well arranged, would be a great boon to the second and third class men of the party. Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Morley, Sir George Trevelyan, and others might take a rest while a dozen or two of the mechanical Gladstones were carried about the country pouring upon successive audiences the reduplicated wisdom of his words. It would spare Mr. Gladstone himself. When asked to visit any town he could send, not as now a post-card, but a phonograph, with his latest public speech, or with a few words specially composed for the particular locality, or directed to the rectification of the latest statement in which Mr. Balfour had corrected his facts. Under the separate assaults of this multiplied Mr. Gladstone, blowing his own trumpet, the Union would finally fall, like the walls of Jericho, to the same kind of music.

There is, however, some possible awkwardness in these auxiliaries to agitation. It is all very well to reproduce, by the magic of science, for the next few months, the impassioned appeal for Home Rule, apology for boycotting, and eulogy of Mr. Dillon which are now being prepared for the people of Birmingham. But suppose some malignant Tories procured an actor with a power of repeating Mr. Gladstone's tones to speak into another phonograph a few of his past speeches, would not the reproduction of the old oratory come into curious competition with the repetition of the new speech? The walls of the towns might be placarded with bills setting forth that "those who wished to hear what Mr. Gladstone said of the Irish Party and its actions in 1882 and 1883 are invited to repair to the Town Hall, where the phonograph will repeat his fervid denunciations of that period." As it is, "Hansard" is awkward enough, but the very voice brought back might be still more embarrassing. Then, is it wise to stereotype, as it were, the views on Home Rule which Mr. Gladstone may entertain this year? His speeches of 1886 delivered in Birmingham to-day would break up the party; for they insisted on the exclusion of the Irish Members and on the State-purchase of all Irish land. If two years have seen great changes in the ideas and plans of the Separatists, why preserve now what will probably be cast aside as obsolete in another twelve months? Who cares to dig into that mine of forgotten pledges and unfulfilled hopes—the volumes of Parliamentary reports—in order to convict any Minister or politician of inconsistency or change? Excepting a few young or inexperienced men, all have turned their backs on old opinions, and have renounced former faiths; and the few who have not done so will eat the usual quantity of their words when time has given them opportunity for the meal. There is nobody sufficiently sinless in either House to cast the first stone, and so the offenders escape unblushing and unreproved. It may be that this is the condition of practical politics in England: it is at least certain that no man has ever led a party without the breach of some promise, or the repudiation of some pledge. We doubt, therefore, the propriety of introducing the phonograph and its too faithful reproductions into English politics. The speeches of our leading men are made for the moment. "At lovers' perjuries they say Jove laughs," and politicians' oaths excite the same amusement amongst thoughtful men. Besides, how can a metal-and-wax Gladstone have the effect of his magnetic personality? In the presence of the little box the audience would be cold, critical, and disposed to weigh the arguments; in the presence of the man himself they forget everything. The magic of his personal heat fires their minds; the charm of woven words lulls their reason to sleep; they are wrapped around in a cloud of verbiage lighted by the glorious rays of a superb political sunset; and they give themselves up heart and soul to the spell of the living, breathing, intensely human enchanter. All this would be lost as the mechanism moved. It might repeat the voice; it could not call back the rhetorician himself. We see this in the difference that all religious persons feel between hearing their favourite preacher speak and reading the best sermon ever printed. The cold page fails where the living presence affects the heart, and we doubt whether a hundred little boxes, containing a hundred Gladstonian orations on Home Rule, would have anything like the effect of one sentence spoken fresh from his own lips. Silence is said to be golden and speech silvern, but tinned words will rank lowest of all.

Turned on to what we may call detective work, the phonograph might be of real use. Sometimes a man, in pursuit of blackmail, comes on a visit of extortion, and the intended victim has to conceal a plain-clothes policeman or a clerk under a sofa or behind a screen. This device is defeated when the conspirator is cautious, as he defers speech until he has searched the room. But with a phonograph open and working in some corner the criminal's words might be taken down and repeated in open court to convict him of attempting to extort money by the use of threats. It might be useful also to solicitors, who sometimes find difficulty in proving that certain offers were made or certain oral pledges given; a phonograph concealed in a desk or an arm-chair might be as useful on occasion as a shorthand clerk. We are not quite sure, however, that the development in every direction of this great invention will prove an unmixed boon. Who has not known the sweetness of the "solitude of two"? No eye nor ear notes the movements or the words of the happy lovers: mamma is in the next room, and the young brothers have happily gone to bed. Then are vows breathed in one beloved ear alone, and rash lovers speak with a fluency and fervour that would astonish their most intimate friends if they could but hear them. Sometimes this secrecy has its drawbacks, when Angelina deposes in court that Edwin promised to marry her in a month, and he denies the utterance of any such pledge. Here might come in the use, or abuse, of the phonograph. Every thoughtful damsel would insert in her mantelpiece one of Edison's best instruments, concealing it by some fretwork. She would then draw her beloved nearer and nearer to the fire, and listen with downcast eyes to his sweet confession, comforted all the while by the reflection that behind her there was a little boxed-up friend taking notes of his remarks. All she would have to do would be to bring the secret witness into court, where it would reproduce for the benefit of the jury, not only his words, but it may even be the sound of the very kisses which sealed the engagement. It is a Buddhist belief that all our acts and words have, as it were, a life of their own perpetually recorded on the tablets of the Universe—that nothing is lost, but that all have results, in one way or another, in this or in a future incarnation. The perpetuation, in the phonograph, of the slightest and most casual sounds—a cough, a sneeze, a sigh, a murmur, or a kiss—shows us science realising the subtle imaginings of the East. It may be that long before Edison perfected his invention the invisible and silent world around us caught up and repeated our words, so that literally "our echoes roll from soul to soul and grow for ever and for ever."

It was after camping and hunting for a few weeks on the top of the Styrian Alps that Mr. John Paget wrote many years since, in his book "On Hungary and Transylvania," that there is no land in which Nature rehabilitates a man and renews his youth so effectively as she does among the mountains which overhang the River Mur, and environ that cheapest and most picturesque of little towns, Gratz, on every side. It is to be hoped that the Emperor of Austria, and his two illustrious guests, the young Emperor of Germany and the King of Denmark, will not need to have their jaded appetites revived by the mountain air; but, anyhow, it can do them no harm to pass three days and nights at Murtzeg, where the hunting-box of the Kaiser Franz Joseph impends over the beautiful valley of the Mur, and nestles among the slopes which lie below the snow-line on the Semmering Alps. "The country round about Murtzeg," writes our Vienna Correspondent, "is exceedingly romantic, the haunts of the chamois being in the midst of perpendicular walls of rock, intersected with innumerable ravines, and abounding in savage scenery. These rocky regions are for the most part uninhabited by man, with the exception of here and there a hamlet perched on a precipitous ledge." In the midst of these inaccessible wilds the "chamois solitudes," as they are called, afford sanctuaries for the "antilope rupicapra," or "gemse"—to use its German name—which the Emperor and the Crown Prince of Austria take such delight in stalking when the autumn comes round. Unfortunately the early snows of premature winter have interfered with the sport of the distinguished visitors who left Vienna on Friday last to take their pleasure, like Earl Percy of Northumberland, for three days among the fastnesses of the Semmering Mountains. The chamois and the bouquetin inhabit the very summits of the highest peaks, where they bound from crag to crag over prodigious distances with an agility and sureness of foot akin to those possessed by the wild goat of the Rocky Mountains. "The chase of this hardy animal," says the author of "Alpine Sketches," "occupies a great portion of the young male adults who pass their time among the mountains, and many of these adventurous hunters perish annually in the hazardous pursuit." The keen sportsman is often overtaken at high altitudes by an impenetrable mist, and loses his way among the ice-bound crags, where occasionally he dies of cold and hunger. In the midst of eternal snows he follows the chamois, which he tracks by the print of his hoofs, and when he perceives a single "gemse" at the top of a peak it sometimes takes the hunter many hours to get within range. If, however, the chamois catches scent of the enemy or discerns his approach with a keenness of eye which nothing escapes, he flies from rock to rock with a rapidity and activity which soon make pursuit hopeless.

No experienced chamois-hunter ever reckons on success with his rifle unless he is prepared to pass night after night among the surrounding snows. When darkness falls he lies down under a rock, without fire or light, and draws from his wallet a little cheese and a slice of oaten bread, which is frozen as hard as adamant, and which he is obliged to break with a stone, or with the hatchet which he carries to cut his path among the crevasses and ice-slopes. His scanty repast being finished, he falls on his bed of snow, and dreams, perhaps, of the route which the hunted chamois is likely to have taken among the silent and inaccessible precipices. At break of day the hunter awakes, insensible to the beauties of morning among the mountains, devoting himself to the pursuit of his prey, and heedless of the dangers which surround him on all sides. "Thus," writes an experienced Swiss chamois-hunter, "these brave sons of the mountains remain day after day and night after night among these awful wastes and deserts, while their wives and families scarcely dare to sleep, lest they should behold and encounter the spirits of their dead husbands and dead fathers; for it is universally believed that after his death the chasseur never fails to appear to the person who is nearest and dearest to him, to make known where his mangled remains lie, and to beg the rites of decent burial." The chamois, of which the Emperor of Austria has for many years been a keen and indefatigable pursuer, is about the size of a large goat; but the neck is longer in proportion and the body shorter, while the black horns, about six or seven inches in length, rise straight up from the agile beast's forehead, and are bent back at the tip so as to form a hook. The colour of the chamois is brown, of a deeper hue in winter than in summer, the tail is black, and the head pale yellow or tan coloured, with a dark brown band along each cheek. His usual summer resort is among the upper regions of the mountains, not far from the snow-line. In winter he descends to the higher forests, or pyrenées—the meaning of which Basque word is "elevated pastures"—where he crops the aromatic and bitter plants which are his favourite food. Like all ruminants the chamois is very fond of salt, and many stones are met with among the Upper Alps which are scooped out and hollowed by the continual licking of chamois tongues, on account of the saltpetre with which these rocks abound. The animal is gregarious, and flocks of one hundred head or more are sometimes surprised in the Swiss Alps. Latterly the numbers have been reduced by the constant and sustained attacks of the numerous hunters who, following the examples of the Rè Galantuomo, the late King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, and of Francis Joseph Emperor of Austria, pass many weeks of each successive year in stalking and killing him. "He is an animal," writes another great authority, "of extraordinary agility, and may often be observed frisking and sporting among the most inaccessible heights. He can leap over ravines sixteen or eighteen feet wide at a single bound; a wall of rock twenty feet high presents no obstacle to his goat-like hoofs; and he passes readily and with astonishing sureness of foot down precipices which would appal any other quadruped. Fearlessly descending perpendicular faces of rock, he strikes his feet once or twice on projecting crags or ridges of the size of a man's hand, so as to make sure of his balance, bringing his hind and fore feet together, and keeping them always in close contact with each other." The hunting of the chamois is spoken of by De Saussure as an occupation attended with great hardship and much danger, to which, nevertheless, hunters to the manner born are passionately devoted. The chamois-chasseur seldom goes out on this adventurous quest alone, but is one of a party or group, which drives the herds up to other parties that approach them from another quarter. The scent of the chamois is so exceedingly keen that he often rushes headlong into danger awaiting him from another group of hunters which he has not descried either by nose or eye. When a flock is feeding a single sentinel is always on the watch and gives notice of the enemy's approach by a shrill whistle, which sets his brethren scampering over rugged rocks and leaping from crag to crag.

We need hardly say that the chamois-hunting in which Emperors, Kings, and Princes usually indulge is of a less adventurous kind than that to which we have just alluded. Yet the late King of Italy and the present Emperor of Austria have often passed the night among the high peaks where the eternal snows lie thickest, and where Winter holds his perpetual and solitary court. In the case of those who climb the precipitous mountains for the first time, and are not in condition to breathe the rarefied atmosphere of high altitudes, chest and heart are often tried to excess, and loss of appetite and of sleep are not infrequently experienced. If, however, a man be sound in limb and lung, and does not over-exert himself at first, but takes easy and regular exercise for ten days or so, new sources of life and vigour will soon awaken within him. All the time he is growing younger, instead of older, and the world of cark and care seems far away. Every day he can walk further and eat more. His shoulder no longer aches under the steady pressure of his express rifle, and with great armfuls of sweet-scenting pine-tops for a couch he learns what is the meaning of unbroken sleep, and gets repose which is unknown to him in ordinary urban life, and a freedom from worry "which bloated ease can never hope to share." After six weeks of such living among the Alps of the Old World, or the Rocky Mountains of the New, he returns to his normal life, his muscles braced, his eye clear, and his hand as steady as his appetite. As to the scenery which surrounds him, there is a grandeur, a loneliness, and a majesty among the mountains that cannot be surpassed. It is impossible to convey an idea of the mingled beauty and soothing sweetness of falling water and immovable basalt when smitten by the glory of the setting sun. No keener sportsmen can anywhere be found than in the territory of the Veitsch, on the edge of which lies the Emperor of Austria's lonely hunting-lodge, at which he and his distinguished guests have been staying during the last few days. Heavy falls of rain and snow have interfered with their sport in the higher mountains since Saturday last, and have rendered chamois-shooting impossible. The freedom and wildness of their life is typified, however, by an incident which on a previous occasion befell the Emperor of Austria and his intimate friend, the King of Denmark, when staying at Murtzeg. They had got separated from their companions, and, coming up with a peasant's cart, they asked for a lift. When they alighted the Emperor told the incredulous peasant who they were. "If you," he replied, "are an Emperor, and your friend a King, I am better than either of you, seeing that I am his Holiness the Pope."

For the last eight-and-thirty years a five-act melodrama, called "Le Courrier de Lyon," written by MM. Moreau, Siraudin, and Delacour, has filled the place occupied during the reign of Louis Philippe by Frédéric Soulié's "Mémoires du Diable"—that is to say, the "Courrier de Lyon," whenever it has been revived, even after a very lengthy interval, has never ceased to draw large and enthusiastic audiences. In alluding to this circumstance our Paris Correspondent has drawn attention to the equally curious fact that during the protracted career of this most stirring play as an acting piece the part of Chopard, called "L'Aimable," has invariably been sustained by the same actor, M. Paulin Ménier. This consummate artiste, who must be now nearly seventy years of age, is as closely identified with the character of the rascally horse-dealer Chopard as Frédéric Lemaître was with that of Robert Macaire, and our own T. P. Cooke and Sothern with William in "Black-eyed Susan," and Lord Dundreary in "Our American Cousin," respectively. There have been many Lesurques and Duboscs—of which the original impersonator at the Gaieté, in 1850, was M. Gouget—but there has been only one Chopard, and M. Paulin Ménier has never ceased to be his prophet. The "Courrier de Lyon," it is sufficiently well known, is to a great extent identical with an ingenious melodrama brought out at the Princess's many years ago under the management of Mr. Charles Kean, and with a later adaptation produced at the Lyceum, entitled "The Lyons Mail." In this Mr. Henry Irving added very green leaves indeed to the chaplet of celebrity which he had already won by his highly artistic interpretation of the characters of Lesurques and Dubosc "doubled" to suit the exigencies of a most remarkable and thoroughly tragical drama, which derives much of its gloomy interest from the fact that it is founded on an extraordinary case of mistaken identity, which is still accounted as one of the most mysterious of French "Causes Célèbres." The melodrama, produced at the Gaieté Theatre in Paris in 1850, was not the first which had been founded on the lamentable judicial error through which in 1797 the innocent Joseph Lesurques was executed for the murder and robbery of a French Government courier, the crimes in question having been really committed by one Dubosc, who was not detected and brought to the scaffold until four years afterwards. In 1810 a certain M. Caigniez produced at the Ambigu Theatre a melodrama called "L'Ouvrier de Menine," of which Lesurques was the unfortunate hero, but with his name Italianised. The reason for this transformation was clear. Many members of the Lesurques family were still alive; and even in 1850, when the "Courrier de Lyon" was first presented at the Gaieté, our correspondent tells us that the surviving kindred of the innocent convict distributed handbills in the theatre urging the public to help them in their efforts to obtain a judicial reversal of a sentence clearly proved to have been unjust.

All these endeavours have hitherto proved to be unavailing, and the case of Lesurques has become so adumbrated by the efflux of time that it has almost merged into the domain of the mythical. On the other hand, the status of the family of Lesurques has unquestionably been injured by the fact that the reversal of Lesurques' conviction would also entail the restitution to his representatives of a very large sum of money, the whole of his property having been confiscated to the State. The case, in one respect, is analogous to that of the Baron de Vode, to whom a deceased English statesman once quietly and coolly remarked that his claim was a perfectly just one, but that the amount of money in dispute was too much, and the events which were the subject of contention took place too long ago. Similarly, Lesurques having been judicially murdered more than ninety years since, and compound interest on the property seized being plainly due as well as the capital to his next-of-kin, the French Government may think the money "too much" and the case "too long ago." The real story of the innocent sufferer, which is needlessly complicated in the French melodrama, is very simple. Joseph Lesurques was a man of undoubted intelligence and acknowledged integrity, who, thanks to judicious speculations, had so well succeeded in business that in 1795 his income was supposed to be nearly five hundred pounds a year. He left Douai, where he had been a chief clerk in the administration of the Department, for Paris, where he took up his residence, in order to educate his children and extend his business operations. He had only been a few months installed in his new domicile when Paris was panic-stricken by the news that the Lyons mail had been stopped at a place called Lieusaint, and the courier, who was the bearer of a considerable sum of money, plundered and assassinated. A certain Guenot, living at Douai, who was a friend of Lesurques, was at first suspected of complicity in the crime, and was arrested; but the "juge d'instruction" detailed to investigate the affair was at once convinced of Guenot's innocence, set him at liberty, but as a mere matter of form asked him to call at his office the next day, in order to receive an official discharge. He did call, accompanied by his friend Lesurques. They had to pass through an ante-chamber crowded with witnesses who had been summoned to Paris to throw light on the mystery of the Lyons mail. A shriek of terror suddenly broke from two girls who were servants at an inn at Montgeron, and who unanimously identified them as two of the band of criminals to whom the crimes were imputed. Guenot and Lesurques were arrested and tried at Melun, when it was stated in evidence that the Lyons courier had with him sixteen thousand francs in gold and nearly eight millions in paper assignats, which, owing to the depreciation of the currency, only represented between five and six thousand francs in bullion. The courier and the postillion were both massacred by a gang of four mounted men; and it was proved that on the morning of the murder a man, whose name was known to be Courriol, arrived on horseback at an inn at Montgeron, where he ordered breakfast for four persons. Soon afterwards three more men on horseback arrived at Montgeron, and afterwards they went to take coffee at another inn, where one of their number—a tall, fair man—was distinctly identified by two witnesses as Lesurques. They were all extremely anxious to know if the Lyons mail had passed, and about five o'clock in the afternoon they took their departure. They were again seen by competent witnesses close to the scene of the crime. Against Lesurques six witnesses testified in the strongest possible manner to his identity with the tall, fair man who was one of the four horsemen who had breakfasted at Montgeron. The only defence that the unhappy man could plead was an alibi. He called a silversmith to prove that on the 8th of Floréal, 1796, he had been with him at the moment when the silversmith was entering a large purchase of plate in his day-book. The book was produced; but by a fatal contretemps the silversmith had post-dated the transaction by a day, and had subsequently changed the 8 into a 9. The defence of an alibi broke down; and, although even while the jury were deliberating a girl, who was Courriol's mistress, wished to give evidence that Lesurques and Guenot were innocent, and that Dubosc and another man named Vidal were the real criminals, the President of the Tribunal coolly told her that the revelation came too late. Lesurques and Courriol were found guilty and condemned to death, Guenot and two other of the accused were acquitted, and one Richard was sentenced to the galleys for life.

Now begins a story of hideous injustice, due altogether to judicial pedantry and obstinacy. Lesurques' appeal to the Court of Cassation was rejected, but the Government of the Directory was dissatisfied with the decision, and sent a message to the Council of Five Hundred, demanding a respite of the convict and a revision of the judgment. The Council acquiesced in both requests, and a commission of inquiry was appointed, of which the reporter was M. Simeon. The inquiry was adverse to the wretched Lesurques. M. Simeon moved the order of the day, which was agreed to by the Council, and on the morrow the two condemned men were guillotined; Courriol exclaiming, as he ascended the scaffold, "I am guilty, but Lesurques is innocent." Thirty years afterwards the executors of M. Simeon published a letter written to him by a "juge de paix" at Besançon, in which the writer said that he was intimately acquainted with Dubosc, who personally was the very image of Lesurques, and he was certain that the former and not the latter was one of the murderers. When, however, the decapitated corpse of the ill-fated Lesurques was mouldering in its dishonoured grave, the public feeling that innocent blood had been shed, and that the real criminal was yet unpunished, was growing stronger and stronger. The police exerted themselves to find Dubosc, and in 1798 he was run to earth. He escaped, was retaken, and at length tried in 1801. When he entered the dock, a shudder of horror ran through the witnesses who had appeared at the former trial. It seemed as though it were the ghost of Lesurques on whom they were gazing. Some of the witnesses who had testified against Lesurques retracted their evidence; one woman who had been among the strongest against him went mad; while the testimony in favour of the alibi, which had formerly been scouted, became incontrovertible. Dubosc, the guilty double of the innocent Lesurques, was condemned and executed; but as yet only moral reparation had been rendered to the memory of the hapless victim of a judicial blunder, whose family had been reduced to destitution by the forfeiture of its estate. It was not until 1821 that the family obtained a first instalment of restitution, amounting to about nine thousand pounds, and in 1835 another grant of ten thousand pounds was made by the Chambers. That, however, which the kindred of the victim most persistently demanded was the rehabilitation of his fair fame; and this could only be obtained by a legislative measure abrogating "Article 443" of the Penal Code, which, basing its motive on the infallibility of the verdict of a jury, and respect for a thing adjudicated upon, ordains that no new trial in a criminal case can be granted unless the accused personally protests against the judgment passed upon him. Poor Lesurques having been guillotined, it was obviously impossible for him to protest against the blundering verdict of the jury; and on this absurd technicality have hinged the repeated refusals of the French tribunals to reconsider the Lesurques case, and reverse a manifestly iniquitous sentence. Meanwhile, the wretched Lesurques family have been subjected to the mournfullest vicissitudes. The widow of Lesurques went mad; one of his two daughters also lost her reason; the other threw herself into the Seine and was drowned. His eldest son abandoned his native country, took service in Russia, and was killed in battle; but there yet remain collateral relatives of Joseph Lesurques to lament his untimely end, and to protest against the cruel denial of justice to his memory.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

[TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

VIENNA, Oct. 8.

According to telegraphic intelligence from Gorgeny, where the Prince of Wales and Crown-Prince Rudolph are about to go bear-shooting, there are three fine specimens of "Bruin" waiting for the Imperial and Royal sportsmen. There are to be three drives—two in the woods of Adojan and one in those of Kasvar. Thirty beaters have been secured in each place.

Besides the Prince of Wales and the Crown-Prince several other personages of distinction have been invited to take part in the shooting, and amongst them Archduke Otto, the Duke of Braganza, and Prince Louis Esterhazy. Operations commence on Wednesday.

The special train in which Crown-Prince Rudolph and his suite were travelling to Gorgeny last night ran over an ox and had to be brought to a standstill. As soon as it was ascertained what had happened the train continued its journey.

The painter Pausinger has been invited by the Crown-Prince to proceed to Gorgeny, probably in view of commemorating the Prince of Wales's visit on canvas.

PARIS DAY BY DAY.

[BY SPECIAL WIRE.]

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, Monday Night.

If the weather to-day cannot be fairly described as altogether dreary, it is certainly treacherous. Bright sunshine has been interrupted at intervals this afternoon by drenching showers, and but for the extremely chilly atmosphere, one might imagine that we had suddenly skipped six months and dropped into a very characteristic April; yet, after all, Paris has been favoured in the matter of weather if we contrast the situation here with the inundations in the South-East of France and the visitation of snow in the Midland counties of England, Wales, and Scotland. For several Winters past when the weather has been bleak here it has often been worse on your side of the Channel, and even when snow has fallen in Paris the atmosphere has been Spring-like when compared with that prevailing on the other side of France's Eastern-frontier. The remark once made by the Merry Monarch, that there were very few days in England so bad that people could not get out of doors for an hour or two in tolerable comfort, holds good of Paris in an even more sensible degree. When luckless mortals are shivering in the North they are prone to direct longing glances Southward; but the accounts received to-day from Marseilles are hardly calculated to lure human swallows in the direction of the Phocean City in the fond hope of escaping from the trials of an abnormally early Winter. The wind is "blowing great guns" all along the coast. Even the stoutest craft shrink from the attempt to leave or even to enter the port. The temperature is very low, the thermometer registering only 50 degrees Fahrenheit. These particulars tell their own tale eloquently enough, and will ruthlessly dispel any dreams of lounges on the Cannebière, or along the beach laved by the "blue-waters of the Mediterranean," in glowing and Summer-like sunshine, in which intending tourists to the South may have indulged. There is stern reality even in the "Land of the bouillabaisse." Citrons may still be flourishing there, but so are red-noses. The bad weather, by the way, is not favourable to the in-gathering of the grapes in districts where the process has not already been effected. Eighteen eighty-eight will not stand out in the annals of vintages as a "good year" after its experiences of the Phylloxera and the Mildew, the Summer-thunder and hail-storms, and, finally, the early cold.

Lord Lytton intended to return to Paris to-day, but he telegraphed this morning to say that he had postponed his departure. His Excellency probably fixed on the 8th as the date of his return under the impression that the Chambers would meet to-day. The re-assembling of Parliament has, however, been put off, as I informed you, till the 15th inst., and even then the Deputies will require several days before they can get to work. The Embassy is still very far from being in a habitable state, and when Lord Lytton comes back he will probably have to take up his quarters at an hotel.

M. Floquet ought to be satisfied! His Decree relating to the foreigners settled in France has procured him the enthusiastic congratulations of the "League of French Workmen and Employés," which not only expresses its warm approval, but begs the Government to go on and induce Parliament to levy a special-tax on foreign residents. This agitation was to be foreseen, although when the Decree was announced it was expressly stated that foreigners would not be put to any expense. One step, however, leads to another, and the Government, having set the stone rolling, may find it difficult to rest and be thankful. Meanwhile, at the Prefecture of Police, "the cry is still they come." Yesterday 881 foreigners made an appearance. The Belgians were still to the fore with 201, Italians and Swiss coming next with 143 and 138 respectively. Germany was represented by a round hundred, Albion by twenty-eight, while of our Transatlantic cousins only two called. The Russians had dwindled down to eighty, but in revenge there were three Persians and one Bulgarian flanked by a dozen Osmanli. This morning the number of visitors was even greater than on the preceding days, 600 presenting themselves with passports and certificates before the hour of noon. Provision has now been made by the gallant Prefect of Police for dames seules: widow-ladies and spinsters who have no male relative to act for them have now a room and fifteen clerks all to themselves. This arrangement will naturally save the "fair-sex" much trouble and annoyance, nor will it be regretted by the sterner section of the foreigners, as, thanks to their superfluous questions and rambling answers, ladies are not as a rule expeditious in matters of business. Fifteen clerks would seem to be rather a large proportion out of fifty, but the Prefect is a man of experience, and knows what will be expected of them.

Replying to a congratulatory address sent to him by some of the inhabitants of one of the Metropolitan Districts, General Boulanger says that he will not swerve from the task which he has set himself. He will defend France and the Republic against those who, by their incapacity and egotism, would lead them to their ruin. This letter is the first sign which the General has made since he started on the journey from which he has just returned.

French Socialists are extremely indignant at the expulsion from Belgium of Citizen Chauvière, a disciple of Blanqui and a member of the Paris Municipal Council. Chauvière was to lecture yesterday at Ransart, and a number of Workmen's Associations had proceeded to the station to receive him with all the honours, when, as he alighted from the train, he was pounced upon by the gendarmes and conducted summarily to the frontier. The workmen, who were in high dudgeon, talked of releasing him by force; but they subsequently abandoned the idea. It seems that the legality of the measure was discussed carefully beforehand by the Belgian Ministers, as Chauvière is married to a Belgian, and one of his children was born in the country—facts which, according to the Law of 1885, render a foreigner proof against expulsion. A very old enactment which permits the Government to send across the frontier any foreigner not residing in Belgium was "disinterred" for the purpose.

To-day the third Lyceum for Girls was opened in Paris. It is situated in the Rue Ranelagh, between Passy and Auteuil, and is called the Lycée-Molière, who sketched a "sweet girl-graduate" in his Henriette. An academical and "Molièresque" discourse suitable to the occasion was delivered by M. Gréard. He was succeeded by M. Lockroy, Minister of Public-Instruction, who in a neat speech condemned the ideas of Schopenhauer regarding the weaker-sex, and hoped that French-women would always be the mothers of valiant soldiers and good citizens. There are now three Girls'-Colleges in Paris—the Lycée-Fénélon, the Lycée-Racine, and the Lycée-Molière. This last-mentioned establishment has been prepared for the accommodation of 350 pupils, of whom 175 will be outside-students. The College has cost the Government £80,000. It contains a fine set of rooms; a quadrangle, tastefully ornamented with flowers and creeping-plants; and a gymnasium. The inauguration of the new Lyceum shows that, despite the original unpopularity of these establishments, they are now, by degrees, coming into favour. In 1800 and 1868 M. Duruy endeavoured, without success, to organise Lyceums for girls. The next to try his hand at the establishment of teaching-institutions of this description was M. Paul Bert, and, owing to his efforts, the Government gave a grant of £4,000 for the purpose. This sum was afterwards raised to £12,000 on the initiative of M. Jules Ferry, and provisional institutions for secondary-teaching were started. The first real Lyceum for Girls was opened at Montpellier in October, 1881. In each establishment there are from twelve to eighteen lady-professors and about half-a-dozen men who will gradually dwindle down to one or two when the female-teachers now in the Normal-school of Sèvres shall have been duly trained and fully equipped for the work of education. According to M. Ferry, the object of these Lyceums is to give women a superior education by teaching them the History of their country; by instilling into their minds the elements of the Natural-Sciences; by instructing them in Logic and in human morals. The "second-form" courses in the Lyceums comprise moral-philosophy, French language and literature, ancient and modern literature in general, history, geography, English and German, domestic economy and hygiene, logic, natural-history, physics and chemistry, arithmetic, geometry and the elements of algebra, drawing, vocal-music, gymnastics, sewing, and the minor household arts. The girls who attend these courses are generally between twelve and seventeen years old, elementary classes being organised for youthful damsels between seven and twelve. The sewing, stitching, and tailoring are taught during three hours weekly. At the end of three years the girls, after examination, receive a Certificate of Études-secondaires. After five years they obtain a Diploma de fin d'Études-secondaires, those who are intended for the vocation of "Teaching" going through an additional course of twelve months.

The preface written by M. Alexandre Dumas fils for Baron de Vaux's book, and which was referred to in your columns yesterday, is a literary masterpiece which has attracted great attention. The eminent dramatist has, however, rather "fluttered" the numerous partisans of that time-honoured institution, the Duello, which finds more favour than ever among Frenchmen at the present day. M. Dumas, in his own elegant and caustic manner, describes the average duel which takes place in Paris as le duel apéritif, a "duel of digestion"—that is to say, a French version of what English scoffers call "pistols and coffee," the fighting being a mere appetite-provoking preliminary to a good breakfast, to which principals and seconds all sit down together and do full justice. In order to do away with silly and pretentious "meetings" of this kind, M. Dumas proposes the promulgation of a Law by which the duellist who had not killed, or at least wounded his man severely enough to make him keep his bed for a month, should be compelled to pay a fine of £400 and to go to prison for two years. Such an Act as this—were it passed by Parliament—would assuredly do away with much of the duelling here, but it does not take a genius to point out that in a country like France, where "serious" Statesmen go out with their men, just as did sensible Saxons and simmering Celtic politicians in England at the beginning of the Century, we are as far as ever from the permanent and peremptory abolition by Parliament of appeals to arms for the adjustment of personal or political quarrels. A Socialist Deputy might bring in such a Bill, but its fate would be inevitable postponement, if not permanent extinction by relegation to the shelf—besides, as M. Albert Wolff pertinently points out to-day, duels in France are not always such futile and flimsy affairs as M. Alexandre Dumas fils would have us believe. The illustrious dramatist seems to have overlooked the fact that the duels which have taken place in or near Paris for the past two or three years have been for the most part sanguinary and often fatal. There have been ludicrous "affairs of honour," of course, in which the combatants have fired pistols, hit trees, haystacks, or umbrellas, and then returned to lunch at a popular restaurant on the Boulevards, there drawing up a pompous procès-verbal, which gave everybody connected with the duel a cheap puff; but the enumeration of the tragic rencontres of recent years would be a long one, and only a few need be mentioned. M. Caze, an unlucky journalist of some promise, was killed by M. Viguier; M. Dachard, a journalist, killed M. de Massas; and M. de Labruyère, a rather fiery writer, was pierced through and through by an officer, who in his turn also received serious injuries, but survived like his adversary. Still more serious was the corps-à-corps encounter between M. Dumont, author of "La France Juive," and M. Arthur Meyer, in which the author had the narrowest of "squeaks." M. Meyer, moreover, has still a bullet in his body from a previous encounter. Within the past year there has been the world-renowned contest between M. Floquet and General Boulanger, and at the height of the Sporting-season the painter Dupuis was stretched dead on the grass at Longchamps on account of a trumpery squabble with a brother-artist. These were duels between Frenchmen and Frenchmen, and do not include encounters between foreigners like the Italian fencing-champions, Casella and Easilone, who fought each other in Paris with fury for nearly an hour, each determining to kill the other, until the terrific combat was terminated by a slight wound in the finger which incapacitated Casella from using his weapon. Murder was thus prevented by the mutual and equally-matched skill of the two champions, whose shirt-fronts were all torn to pieces when they left off fighting. Similar in character was the memorable duel between Baron de San Malato, the Italian, and Pons, the French champion, which also stopped short of the tragic owing to the splendid skill of the contestants. The pistol encounter which was arranged to take place after a memorable dispute between General Boulanger and Baron de Lareinty was the cause of much shoulder-shrugging and sarcasm, but shortly afterward M. Carmona and Mr. Potter, an American, faced one another at twenty-five paces, meaning mischief, and when the smoke cleared away it was thought that Mr. Potter, who had received a ball in the ribs, was mortally wounded, while his adversary was hit in the leg. In the face of these facts the playful but polished sarcasm of M. Dumas misses its mark.

Allamacher, the printer of Versailles, who was supposed to have inherited twenty-five millions of francs from a testator who died in America, is still playing the part of a "wandering heir." It is stated that the printer really received over three thousand pounds from a banker in order to enable him to go to America, where his property was awaiting him, and that the new Monte-Cristo has actually sailed for the "States." One thing, however, is certain, that ever since the announcement of Allamacher's reputed good luck the office of the printing establishment at Versailles wherein he worked has been inundated by letters from all parts of France. Among these epistles were 800 communications of all sorts and sizes from women, thirty letters from people who wanted to float newspapers, waxworks, waterworks, railways, mines, and every kind of financial undertaking; 230 letters from patentees; twenty-seven epistles from poets offering copies of their latest productions; and a myriad of others from tradesmen, struggling lawyers, littérateurs, painters, musicians, actors, and "quacks." The women's letters were the most amusing of all. There was the svelte and symmetrical sylph, with golden hair, who has already been noticed; the widow of a general who modestly represented herself as of "a certain age," but well-preserved, still beautiful in every way, and calculated to assure the felicity of a millionaire. Then there were dozens of demoiselles avec taches, and numerous damsels without any blemish; a laundress who loved compositors, and a score of milliners, each of whom assured M. Allamacher that she was ready to die for him if necessary. Some of these letters bore curious addresses, such as: "To M. Allamacher, ex-Printer," or "To the Heir of Five Million Dollars, at Versailles," or "To M. Allamacher, of Versailles, the Impersonation of Virtue Rewarded." Hardly any of these peculiar communications have reached the printer, who is now either hiding in mysterious quarters in Paris or crossing the Atlantic in quest of the "Golden Fleece" which, after all, this new Jason may not be able to secure.

A promising young soldier, the second son of Baron de Carayon-Latour, has just been poisoned owing to a fatal mistake on the part of a military hospital assistant. The young victim was quartered with his regiment—the Eighth Dragoons—at Meaux, and, feeling ill during the manœuvres at Châlons, he was put on the Sick-list, and obtained leave to go home to his family. Before leaving camp he went to the hospital at Mourmelon for some medicine to allay internal pains, and received from one of the soldier-assistants of the establishment a packet of white powder, which he dissolved and swallowed. M. de Carayon-Latour then entered the train for Paris, and during the journey the poison took effect, and caused him terrible convulsions. On arriving at home, more dead than alive, the young man immediately went to bed, telling his father that he was poisoned, and that no doctor could save him. The Baron, almost beside himself with grief, sent for Doctor Brouardel and two other medical experts, but when they arrived they found that the case of the patient was hopeless. The young man died, asking his father not to have the hospital-assistant punished, as he had given him poison, which was probably arsenic, by mistake. M. de Carayon-Latour was only twenty-one years old, and was serving a term of five years in the Army.

A determined attempt to murder an "unfortunate" was made last night in the Avenue Wagram. A young man went to a place of ill-repute with a woman about eleven o'clock, and after the two had been together in a room for about a quarter of an hour loud cries of "Murder" rang through the house. Shortly afterwards the woman rushed downstairs holding her hands up to her throat, from which blood was spurting in streams. The owner of the house immediately ran out for the police, locking the door after him, and the would-be murderer was captured as he endeavoured to escape through a window. The woman had, it appears, robbed her companion, who took out a large knife and gashed her throat. The "unfortunate" was conveyed to a hospital, where a cannula had to be put in her windpipe in order to enable her to breathe. Her condition is considered precarious.

On the Bourse to-day the last quotations were: Three per Cents., 82f 25c (a fall of 12½c); Four and a Half per Cents., 105f 52½c (no change); Italians, 96f 50c (a fall of 25c); Turks, 15f 2½c (a fall of 10c); Spanish Exteriors, 72f 70c; Egyptian Unified, 420f; ditto Preference, 516f 75c; and Ottoman Bank, 527f. Suez Canal shares closed at 2,200f, and Rio Tinto at 578f. Foreign stocks were weak to-day, especially Spanish Exteriors—in which there was a fall of 25c—and Portuguese. Egyptian Unified fell 5f, and Italians, Hungarians, and the Russian Loan of 1880 alike felt the influence of the downward movement. French funds were the least affected, Three per Cents. closing with a comparatively slight loss, and Four and a Half per Cents. undergoing no change. There was a fall of 12f 50c in Suez Canal shares. The Petite Bourse reopened this evening for the first time after several months. The following were the closing prices: Turks, 15f 7c; Spanish Exteriors, 72f 70c; Egyptian Unified, 421f 87c; Ottoman Bank, 529f 37c; and Rio Tinto, 588f 75c.

KAISER WILHELM'S TOUR.

VIENNA, Oct. 8.

Deer-stalking at Murzteg yesterday began at the early hour of half-past three. The German Emperor was more successful than on the previous day. His Majesty shot two fine stags, whereas the Emperor of Austria only wounded one. The King of Saxony and Prince Leopold of Bavaria shot nothing. At half-past ten the party returned home, and after breakfast the Emperor Franz-Joseph and all his guests, excepting the Emperor William, attended Mass at the village church.

As the Emperor of Austria was going into church an ex-schoolmaster in reduced circumstances handed him a petition, which was graciously accepted.

Luncheon was served at noon, and after it was over the two Emperors remained indoors at work. Many affairs of State require their personal attention even when they are so far away from the centre of politics. Couriers travel to and from Murzteg at least once a day, and their Majesties have fully a couple of hours' occupation receiving their own and dictating despatches.

In the course of yesterday afternoon the Emperor William went for a walk quite alone. During dinner, which was served at six o'clock, the local band played Styrian melodies, and were afterwards complimented by the two Emperors. At night there was a heavy fall of snow, and [illegible] all hope of chamois-shooting [illegible].

Kaiser Wilhelm will leave Murzteg on Wednesday morning, accompanied by the Emperor of Austria, the King of Saxony, Prince Leopold of Bavaria, and the other distinguished members of the party, as far as the station of Mürzzuschlag, on the Süd-Bahn, shortly after eleven.

The German Emperor will start direct for Italy at one o'clock. Prince Henry of Prussia will join the German Kaiser on the way at Villach. A special court-train will await his Majesty at Pontebba, on the Italian frontier, where he will be welcomed by an aide-de-camp of King Humbert. The Imperial train will proceed to Rome via [illegible] and Florence. His Majesty will arrive in Rome at four o'clock on Thursday afternoon. He will remain in Italy till the 19th inst., and then return [illegible] to Potsdam.

It was prematurely announced some time ago that the Emperor William would visit Vienna a second time before returning to Germany, but, though he may possibly do so, nothing appears yet to have been decided in the matter.

I have received an interesting piece of information concerning the [illegible] in connection with Kaiser Wilhelm's arrival here. Great precautions were taken for his Majesty's safety, both at the railway-station and along the road thence to the Palace. The Viennese were half-amused and half-concerned at the altogether unusual display of military and police, which gave rise in certain quarters to the apprehension of a demonstration on the part of the Anti-Semitic and Ultra-Germanophil elements. According to what is now stated, however, [illegible] Particulars cannot be disclosed, but circumstances just now are such as to render it less advisable than it used to be for Foreign Potentates to run unnecessary risk.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 8.

The Emperor and Empress spent Saturday afternoon at Nowo-Rossijk, after which their Majesties, accompanied by their suite, proceeded on board the steamer Moskva, which was escorted by several other ships of the Black Sea fleet, to Batoum, where they arrived yesterday morning, and were received with much ceremony by the principal authorities and the foreign consuls.

Large numbers of the inhabitants, forming an extremely motley assemblage of Caucasian and Eastern people, had assembled in the town, and gave their Majesties a hearty welcome.

After attending Divine service in the local church, the Emperor and Empress were present at the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a new orthodox cathedral.

THE "BLACK-MOUNTAIN" WAR.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.]

SIMLA, Oct. 8.

General McQueen, with the third column from the [illegible] of the "Black-Mountain," arrived yesterday on the ridge at the back of the Mountain, hotly followed by the enemy. Three Sepoys were killed, and two wounded.

A reconnoitring party found a new route, which is now being [illegible] the enemy were under a heavy fire from the enemy, by which three men were killed, and one wounded.

The second and third columns are now joined in one camp.

CHITTABUT, Oct. 7.

An attack was made yesterday by the British force, under Colonel Vincent, upon the steep hill overlooking the camp, with the result that the enemy was driven out, with much loss. On the British side two Sikhs were wounded. The camp is now entrenched.

"The company have, therefore, made a proposal to the Charity Commissioners, which, subject to the approval of Parliament, has been accepted by that body, whereby the buildings, with seven acres of land, [illegible] the Royal Naval School at New-cross, will be acquired by the Commissioners out of the surplus funds of the City parochial charities. [illegible] the Goldsmiths' Company [illegible] their corporate funds (not trust funds), and [illegible] an annual endowment of a similar amount. The institute is intended to be called 'The Goldsmiths' Company's (New-cross) Institute.'

"As soon as possible after the vacation a scheme will be prepared by the Charity Commissioners for the constitution of a governing body, and for [illegible] the scheme will have to be laid before Parliament for approval, and the arrangement between the Charity Commissioners and the Goldsmiths' Company [illegible].—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

"WALTER S. PRIDEAUX.

NEW SONG by ERNEST BIRCH.

THE PARTING HOUR.
Words by Clement Scott.

To-night the dew will kiss the rose,
The song-bird shelter on the tree,
The silent stream that lonely flows
Will find its refuge in the sea!
There's not a bird, a leaf, a flow'r
Alone to-night will sink to sleep.
Only for us the Parting Hour;
Your eyes and mine alone will weep!
Was ever weary hour like this?
Heart! oh my heart! and must we part?
How can we part like this?
Oh heart! my heart! my heart!

To-night the rose will fold the dew,
Distilled upon her scented breast,
The lost ones sleeping 'neath the yew
They are at peace—they are at rest:
There's not one soul in pain, or heart
To-night that may not dream—and yet
We two alone must part—
We two must wander and forget;
Without a whisper or a kiss
My heart! my heart! how can we part?
How can we part like this?
Oh heart! my heart! my heart!
